Helping the Helpless to Walk.

"Some of the cures which osteopathy has effected have been truly marvelous. Paralysis, where there is no serious involvement of the spinal cord, is often cured by this mode of treatment. A recent case which attracted much attention was that of a man who was totally paralyzed from the waist downward. He was brought to the osteopathic hospital a year and a half ago. A daily treatment was administered, and at the end of six months he had regained control of the bodily functions, and was able to walk about on crutches. Three months later he used only a cane, and now he is able to walk short distances without any assistance whatever, with the prospect of complete and permanent restoration of health within the next few months. Hundreds of cripples have been cured by osteopathy. Hip-joint disease, that menace of childhood, is readily amenable to treatment if taken before the disease becomes too firmly settled. Both muscular and arthritic rheumatism have been repeatedly cured, and many other disabilities can be lessened, though not wholly removed."—Cosmopolitan Magazine.
