The exclusive shoe store of Smith & Green is now open. While all of the stock has not arrived, every day makes their general line more and more complete, and they are prepared to fill nearly every want. They will also carry a full line of hosiery, which is expected to arrive on every train.

The new firm will announce its opening date a few days later, when the public will be cordially invited to visit their emporium. It is something that must be seen to be appreciated, and is an establishment that the city has every reason to be proud of.

The proprietors are both young men who have been identified with the best interests of the city for several years and being practical and experienced shoe men and know what is required in this community, there is no question but that they will succeed. Their announcement appears elsewhere in this issue.

The success of the undertaking is practically assured under the present plan, and by Saturday night the greater part of the stock will have been subscribed.

It is reasonable to have perfection in our eye that we may always advance toward it, though we know it can never be reached.—Johnson.
