CLAIMED TO BE HEIR TO THRONE OF ENGLAND

From New York comes the story of the death of a man who always claimed that he was the rightful heir to the British crown. The man was Dr. Edmund Montgomery Moffett who was buried on Sunday near his home at Woodliffe, N. J.

Dr. Moffett, who was 62 years of age, was born of a good family in Cincinnati and for many years had a large medical practice in New York city, from which he accumulated a fortune. He and his immediate ancestors had traced their genealogy back to 400 years B. C., and Dr. Moffett claims to be the true lineal descendant of King James II. His claim to the throne of Great Britain came through Fergus I, first King of Scotland, and down to Robert Bruce and the Stuarts. Dr. Moffett was a highly educated man, and only to his immediate friends did he discuss his relationship with royalty. He never made any formal claim for the throne of England, contenting himself with the belief that the crown rightfully belonged to him.

CAUSE OF THE WRECK

A railroad board of inquiry was convened July 9, consisting of Trainmaster Matheson, Division Roadmaster McCann, Maurice Giroux and John Harrison to determine the cause of the derailment of three cars between Durkee and Unity, June 8. The board found that the derailment was caused by the load in one car being heavier on one side than on the other, causing the heavy side to settle on the inside of the curve thus reducing the carrying weight on the outside, causing it to lift readily from the rails. The car was not loaded properly in the first place.
