Those using poisoned grain to kill squirrels should be exceedingly careful in not placing it in fields where stock is permitted. There have been a number of animals poisoned this spring and several deaths have resulted.

Stockmen report the range in better condition than for years. The timely rains is one of the primary causes, another is the ranges are not overstocked to the extent they were several years ago. Bunch grass is reported nearly knee high, a condition that recalls several decades ago before it was eaten out, the native condition that prevailed when the white man first occupied this country.
