IDAHO GOING DRY.
 "Ninety per cent of Idaho will be dry within a year," was the startling prophecy made by Governor Brady of that state while in the city this morning, relates the Pendleton E. O. While not a temperance fanatic the governor of the Gem state is a decided believer in local option and he thinks that the wave of public sentiment against the saloon and its attendant evils has struck his state with such force as to make the days of liquor interests seem doomed.
 Being a native of Kansas and a resident of that state for many years, he has had abundant opportunity to get first hand information as to the effects of prohibition upon the state and the community. His opinions are therefore the result of personal observation and have not been formed as the result of garbed accounts from one side or the other.
 He was particularly interested in Pendleton because of the test now in progress here and in the course of his interview declared "you will be surprised, in a few months, to see the manner in which Pendleton will not only recover from the temporary shock she received at the closing up of the saloons, but at the steady, sure and substantial business growth which will result."
