NEW WATER CODE COSTLY

EXPENSIVE TO ADJUDICATE WATER RIGHTS THIS YEAR.

Where Light Expense Was Attached Cost Is Now a Heavy One.

Instead of diminishing the cost of water, the present water code raises the price of it to far exceed that of the old law. At the recent inspection of the proofs at Cove, if one should decide to contest all of the applications it would cost the applicant five dollars per day all of the time that the contest was before the water board. Under the old law when the contests were taken before the Circuit court, all that the cost amounted to was $10 per day, which cost all of the applicants that were contested would divide up and the total cost for each applicant would amount to very little.

For instance at Cove, 100 applicants have their claims in for water. If one should decide to contest a part of these it would cost the ones contested and the ones who are doing the contesting $5.00 each per day, while the contest is before the board. Outside of these the fees for filing the application of the 100 applicants amounted to $1,000, or $10 per application, and this added to the cost of the contest in case there is a contest would amount to more than the water is worth. The contest fee and the application fees go into the state treasury, and will pay the water commissioners salary for the time they are on duty. The new water code with its expenses and the time involved is not so very pleasing now as it was at its inauguration.

Some of the protests reported yesterday were those of J. A. McNeil and Phoebe J. Anderson, owners of the McNeil Ditch company against the claims of Jennie B. Corpe, Alice C. Corpe and B. L. Batchelor; F. T. Sanford and Otto Johnson against Alice C. Corpe and the Caldwell Ditch company against Claude N. Ogilvie of Portland. The conflict in the claims of K. J. Stackland with the claims of the Caldwell Ditch company were adjusted and settled yesterday.
