New Plans Of Insurgents

THE new and startling insurgent movements now under way and the recent battle in the house of representatives, together with the significant fact that Gifford Pinchot, the deposed chief forester, and Ambassador Straus, ex-secretary of commerce and labor, have been summoned to Europe to confer with Colonel Roosevelt, have drawn the attention of the whole country to those members in both senate and house who some time ago declared that they were not being treated fairly in congress and proposed to fight for their rights to the last ditch. One of the new moves that are being widely discussed is the big conference of insurgents and reformers from all parts of the Union planned to be held in Washington, the purpose being to launch a nation wide movement against privilege. In the national capital it is hinted that the result will be the formation of a new national political party. The plans include a secondary conference in New York which will have largely to do with finance. Judge Ben B. Lindsey, the "boys' judge," is slated to take a prominent part in the new movement.

A review of the history of the insurgent uprising in the senate and house should prove of interest at this time. The exact date of its beginning is not known. Some think it began in the house in the spring of 1908, when the appropriations committee undertook to defeat an item of $350,000 in the sundry civil appropriation bill to pay interstate commerce accountants to examine the books of railroads. President Roosevelt threw down the gage of battle on that item. Representative Townsend of Michigan championed the appropriation, which was carried against the powerful influence of the appropriations committee by something like a half dozen votes. That gave President Roosevelt fresh courage, and he entered upon a contest for the enactment of other administration bills.

But whether the insurgent cause sprang from that interstate commerce item or from any one of half a dozen other legislative matters in that first session of the Sixtieth congress, on which the speaker's program was resisted by members of his own party, it steadily gained in momentum at the south end of the capitol. In the senate La Follette is the pioneer insurgent. He went there over four years ago with a national reputation as a Republican dissenter and lost no time in advancing ideas about railroad regulation and other corporation reforms which most of his Republican colleagues frowned upon. More than any other, unless it be Senator A. B. Cummins of Iowa, he had been preaching reform ideas and creating the powerful sentiment back in the states which has stood all insurgents in such good stead.

One of the greatest accessions to La Follette's standard in the senate was Cummins, although he has not always fought side by side with him. Nelson and Clapp of Minnesota and Dolliver of Iowa, all older senators in point of service, joined him eventually because of the exigencies of the political situation at home, where the insurgent sentiment had become rampant. These men, with Bristow and Beveridge, are generally classed as the dyed in the band insurgents in the senate, the Senators Borah, Brown, Crawford, Bourne, Burdett, Dixon and Gamble are called "near insurgents."

The insurgents are not all fighting against the rules, as many believe.
