KEARNEY GIVEN ONLY $2,000

VERDICT IN BIG O. R. & N. SUIT IS REACHED.

Plaintiff Sued for Twenty Thousand and Got Two Thousand.

Damages in the sum of $2000 were awarded to Clarence Kearney today by the jury which had been out since 10 o'clock last night, says Tuesday's East Oregonian. The verdict was brought in at 2 o'clock today.

Kearney had sued the railroad company for $20,000 for injuries received in falling from a train pulling into the local depot May 28 of last year. It is alleged that the door to the vestibule had been left open, contrary to the rules and custom of the train service and that he fell out of this door into the darkness when the train was subjected to a jerk in being brought to a stop. It is understood that the company had offered to settle the claim for $3000.

The jury came in this morning and asked to have a portion of the instructions read to them again, the feeling prevailed that a hung jury was probable. Some surprise was therefore occasioned when it was announced at 1:30 that they were ready to report.

It seems that nine of the twelve men were in favor of allowing big damages, while the other three did not think he was entitled to any damages. The compromise verdict resulted.

Daddy's Bedtime Story

The Papoose That Was an Orphan

Carries Her Papoose on Her Back

JACK and Evelyn had been downtown with their mamma shopping. They visited a place where some Indians were employed making moccasins and other Indian articles. When daddy put on his slippers in the evening Evelyn told daddy what they had seen. She told him particularly about a "cute Indian baby."

"The Indian baby is called a papoose," said daddy. Evelyn thought that a funny name to call a baby, but Jack said he had read about it.

"Are all Indian babies called that?" asked Evelyn.

"All," said daddy, "boys as well as girls."

"Do you know any stories about them, daddy?" asked Evelyn.

"Not many," replied daddy. "But they don't have cradles, as you have. The mother of a papoose—she is called a squaw—carries her papoose on her back when she takes it out. When the papoose is in the tepee, as Indians call their homes, it is often strapped on a sort of board when it goes to sleep."

"But when the baby is not asleep, and when it is not being carried on its mamma's back, does it have any dolly when it gets big enough?" asked Evelyn.

"Yes," answered daddy. "But the Indian dolly is not as pretty as yours."

"Do Indian girl babies grow up to be pretty women?" asked Evelyn.

"If they grow up among white people sometimes they become very beautiful," replied daddy.

"When Mrs. McFudge was a missionary," continued daddy—"that was before she married Mr. McFudge—a papoose orphan was left to her, and she brought it up. She was just like a mother to that orphan papoose. When it grew up to be a girl she taught the papoose to sew and sing and dance. When the papoose got to be a girl she was sent away to school. After she had finished her course she studied to be a doctor. Then she went back to her people and cared for the sick and taught them many things that helped them, and the Indian mothers taught their children. All her life she was called by her people the Papoose Medicine Woman."

"Didn't she get old?" asked Jack.

"No doubt," answered daddy. "But when people do good their age is never

Just then the cuckoo came out of the little Swiss clock and chirped seven times, and soon after the lights in the house were turned out.

Improvements Wanted.

Will some Philanthropist invent A different kind Of spring That bears resemblance To the one Whose praise We often sing. One that has all The pleasant parts That we So much enjoy And chases to Some place remote The features that Annoy? We'd like to have A mudless Spring If there Is one in stock, The kind To use When we would take A walk around the block. We want to have The breeze Soft And not the kind To snatch Our hats And send them Down the street A running match. Spring sort of suits us, And we do Not take it Much to task, But It could be Improved in spots If any one Should ask.

Philanthropy.

Plant a little garden; Raise your own supplies. Give your neighbors' hens a chance. They need exercise.

Haunting Memory.

"He is trying to live down his past." "I didn't know he had one." "Oh, yes." "What did he do—rob a bank or run off with another man's wife?" "No; he used to eat with his knife."
