GROWERS SEE CONNIVING

BELIEVED BUYERS POOLED TO PLAY OREGON RAISERS

Growers Have Been Asked to Consider Conditions Before They Contract Their Wool at the Price Now Being Offered by the Eastern Buyers—Usual Bunch Invades This State For Wool.

Though woolbuyers have been flocking to Pendleton and other Eastern Oregon points for several weeks none of this season's clip has so far been sold, so far as can be ascertained, says the East Oregonian. Growers are apparently of the opinion that strong influences are at work to keep the price lower than actual conditions justify and they are therefore showing a disposition to hold until sales day. Last year there were no sales days for the reason that all the wool was disposed of at satisfactory prices before the time for the sales arrived.

It is said that last year's activity on the part of the buyers was due to an effort to break the Chicago Storage Wool Warehouse plan. This failed, however, if there ever was any such scheme on foot and growers are displaying more independence this year than ever before.

A. J. Kollin, one of the largest growers of wool in the state of Idaho, and also a prominent Chicago commission merchant, is quoted in a Chicago wool paper as offering the following advice to growers:

"Growers should carefully consider foreign wool market conditions before accepting lower prices for their crops," said A. J. Kollin. "Foreign markets are active at the highest prices of the year and home market conditions are not warranted except through causes entirely due to domestic influences. Certainly the new clip will not exceed consumptive demands as we will be compelled to import wool for a number of years to come. Strike threats and rumors of tariff revision may have been depressing influences and there are doubtless many who are honest in the belief that prices of woolen goods in this country are too high to the consumer. My advice is to store wool and not make concessions to the dealer that are of a sacrificial nature. It is going to be a long-drawn struggle between buyer and producer this year and dealers show a decided disposition to clean up old stocks before starting out."

Roses have been in bloom in a Brownville garden since April 18.
