Time conquers all things
Except "The Weld That Holds"

Here's the fence that will stand the test of Time—the test that proves. The secret is in the weld. There are no wraps, no ties, no twists, no clamps—just line and stay wires welded at every contact point. This weld is as strong as the wire itself. By doing away with superfluous pieces we add strength and durability and reduce cost.

Pittsburgh Perfect Poultry Fence

The only welded fence. Strong as a solid sheet of perforated steel. A chick can't squeeze through, a bull can't break through. Perfectly adaptable to uneven ground and to all temperature changes. No need for top or bottom boards or for special bracing. The best steel heavily galvanized. Positive guarantee covers every point.

SPECIAL—Top and Bottom Wires No. 11. All others No. 14.
REGULAR—Top and Bottom Wires No. 10. All others No. 13.
HEAVY—Top and Bottom Wires No. 9. All others No. 12.
HEIGHTS—24, 36, 48, 52 and 58 inches.

The cost is small; the service great.
73 different styles for all purposes.

APRIL A FAIR MONTH

WEATHER CONDITIONS NOT OF A DISASTROUS SORT.
Few Frost Periods and Substantial Rains Assist Crops.

The month of April was not a disagreeable month to fruit growers, farmers and city folks, according to statistics just issued by Weather Observer Worstell for that month. The mean temperature for the 30 days was 53 degrees, the maximum of 88 occurring on the 25th and the minimum temperature of 25 degrees occurring on the 15th. The total precipitation was 1.62 inches, a rainfall that would please everyone. In all, 13 days were clear, nine partly cloudy and eight cloudy. The dates of frosts were on the 15th and 16th, with no killing frosts on either of these occasions. Hail fell on the 8th and on the same day thunder storms prevailed. The direction of the prevailing wind was westerly.

Not many clothes today are made of all wool cloth. Hart Schaffner & Marx use no other. See the clothes at the Peoples Store.

Daddy's Bedtime Story

A Pony That Didn't Go to War

JACK and Evelyn were waiting when daddy came in. He was very late. He said his horse had met with an accident and he had to walk. This prompted Evelyn to say that she hoped to grow up and have a horse and a riding habit. Thereupon Jack remarked that he didn't care to wait until he grew up before he went horseback riding. He wanted a pony right off.

"How long before a pony gets to be a horse, daddy?" asked Evelyn.

"Tell us a pony story, daddy!" shouted Jack. Evelyn was willing, and as soon as daddy put on his smoking jacket he began:

"This pony I am going to tell you about came very near going to the great civil war you have heard your grandfather tell about. In some parts of the country horses got to be so scarce during the war that many people were as careful about any colts they might have as they were about their pets. One family in the town where I grew up had a pony which was raised as gently as a dog. He used to be let in the front yard, where the grass was very nice and tender, and when he ate all he wanted he would roll on the lawn until he got tired, and then the mother, who was raising the pony for her little boy, talked to pony. When the pony got tired of playing in the grass the good mother of the home where the pony lived would feed him apples from the stoop of the house, and when it came time for the pony to be put up for the night the kind lady would give him a lump of sugar if he had been a very good pony. One day some soldiers came to town, and as they were tired they wanted some horses, and, as nobody had any to sell, the soldiers took any they could find. All soldiers have to do that sometimes. The lady who was raising the pony heard about the soldiers, and she was very much alarmed. She sent for Mrs. McFudge and asked her what she should do. Mrs. McFudge said she would take the pony and keep him in the cellar of her house. And she did. She hid the pony and kept him in the dark for some time. When the soldiers had gone the pony was let out, and his owner got Mr. McFudge to take the pony very far away, where there were no soldiers. He grew up to be a horse. He was the granddaddy of the horse I own, and the good lady who thought so much of him was your grandmother."

"I see," said Jack. "And you were the little boy that owned the pony?"

"But if you had been a little girl," said Evelyn, "the soldiers would not have thought of taking the pony, for—"

"Well," said daddy, "it's time for everybody, young and old, to be in bed."
