The Rinehart-Little Piano Company

Have opened the Largest and Finest Piano Store in Eastern Oregon

Our business has been phenomenal since we started. We are selling as fast as we can get them. There is a reason for that. First, we have but high grade pianos. We do not carry special pianos but direct from the best factories in America, and backed by the oldest piano manufacturers in the country.

Second, we pay cash for every instrument, thereby getting them at rock bottom prices, saving you from $75 to $125 on your piano.

Third, we get them in car load lots and save on freight. Every piano we sell we give a written guarantee from the manufacturer to last for many years—a life time with proper care. When you buy a piano from the

Daddy's Bedtime Story — The Adventure of Rags

Sure Enough There Was an Advertisement

"NOW, children," said daddy as the clock showed that it was time for their good night story. "I am going to tell you about a little doggie named Rags that got lost in a big city. Well, Rags—he was called that because he was always tearing everything—was only five weeks old when he thought it would be fine sport to chase a chicken, and one morning he ran down the street after a long legged rooster. Being such a little fellow, he couldn't run very fast, and when the rooster got away from him he sat down on a corner and yelped and whined and growled until all the cats in the neighborhood climbed up the trees for fear he would bite them.

"After Rags had got over his angry fit he discovered that he was lost, and then he cried and yelped again, this time so loudly that a big policeman came along and said if he didn't be a good dog and keep quiet he would arrest him and have him hanged. This frightened the puppy, for he had heard that hanging gave one a very bad headache, so he ran as he had never run before.

"At last Rags could run no more, and he crawled into a front yard and lay down in the tall, cool grass. As he was resting here another puppy with a big bone in his mouth came in and lay down beside him and said:

"Hello, little one! Why don't you grow?"

"Now, children, Rags thought he was a pretty big dog, and he got angry right away.

"Who you calling little one?" he asked, the hair on his back bristling up.

"Why, you, of course," said the other doggie. "I really thought you were a mouse at first."

"Oh, you did, eh?" snapped Rags, and, tired as he was, he grabbed hold of the stranger's tail and held on until the saucy little dog begged his pardon and said that Rags was almost as big as an elephant. Then the two became great friends, and finally Rags, with tears in his eyes, told how he was lost.

"Pooh! That's nothing," said the other. "I'm lost, too, and just see how fat and happy I am. But I'll tell you how to get home. We'll go look in the newspapers and see if your master has advertised for you."

"So the two little doggies went along until they found a newspaper, and, sure enough, there was an advertisement for the lost Rags."

"And did he find his home, daddy?" asked Evelyn.

"Well, it was like this, dear. When Rags read the advertisement and saw that his master only offered 10 cents reward to get him back he said that he was no ten cent dog, and so he lived on the streets with the other little doggie all the rest of his life."

The Town Council.

"One of these big millionaires is giving away lakes, conditionally, of course. Shall we apply for one?"

"Dunno. Which does he expect the town to provide, the hole in the ground or the water?"—Kansas City Journal.
