

About The City

Head of Commanderies Here.

C. T. Taylor, imminent grand master of Oregon Knight Templars, paid the local lodge, Commandery No. 6, an official visit last night. Several Knight Templars from Union were here also. They include Mr. Hunter, Frank Bidwell, Mayor Wright, S. O. Swackhammer and several others. The event was an important one to the local commandery and was attended with considerable pleasure as well as lodge business matters.

Receives Army Record.

An embossed record of his career and service in Company F, 100th Indiana Vol. Inf. has just been received by I. W. Faulk. The document is a very attractive one and records that Mr. Faulk was injured twice during the war and is a member of the Soldiers and Sailors Historical and Pension society. M. Wallingsford is the historian of the company and Mr. Faulk values the document very highly. It is truly a beautiful thing.

Ivanhoe Will Return Tuesday.

Word has been received from District Attorney F. S. Ivanhoe that he will return from his Eastern trip next Tuesday. Mr. Ivanhoe has been through the Eastern states visiting the places of his childhood and young manhood.

Will Collect Season Tickets.

The chautauqua committee has announced that it will start collection of season tickets, subscribed some time ago, at once. The committee has secured Miss Helen L. Burns of Whitman college as a domestic science feature at the coming chautauqua.

DR. STEVENSON.

der man who was on trial yesterday for selling whiskey, was found guilty last evening in Justice William's court and fined $60 and costs.

Franchise Fight is Ended.

Judge Knowles today handed down a decision which clears up the litigation pending at Joseph relative to water works franchises. The city has decided to build a municipal plant and claimed the Waterworks company franchise had expired. The company on the other hand maintained they had both a perpetual and exclusive franchise. The court ruled, on evidence heard in the case, that the company has a perpetual but not an exclusive right to own the plant there.

Ice Plant Running.

Manufacture of ice is going on at the Blue Mountain creamery today and the refrigerator plant is also in full running order. The machinery is all accurately installed and the plant runs "like a top" this morning. The first batch of ice from the plant will be turned out this evening some time. Butter rooms, storage rooms, ice rooms and the other adjuncts of the plant are all supplied with the cooling pipes.

Georgia Banker Visiting Here.

Chas. H. Hillhouse and sister Miss Lucy May Hillhouse of Georgia, arrived today on a tour of the northwest and are being entertained by their aunt, Mrs. Fred D. Halsten. Mr. Hillhouse is a banker and is the son of Vice President Hillhouse of the Georgia-Gulf Railroad system. Miss Hillhouse is an accomplished musician and vocalist and will be in the city a few days.

Musical Members Attention.

Members of the Lyle Tuesday musical who have not yet paid their dues for the present year but wish to remain with the club will please hand their remittance to the secretary before May 24. At that time the last meeting of the season will be held and all members now in arrears will not be carried on the books after that date unless they are paid up.

Preparing for Decoration Day.

Oliver P. Morton Post No. 36, is preparing for fitting decoration day exercises, and the local committees have the matters well in hand.

Serving Time on Street.

Charles Van Duyn who was fined yesterday for being drunk and disorderly, is working out $20 worth of fine on the streets.

Donates Theatre.

Manager B. M. Sherwood all but donated the use of the Isis theatre last evening for the use of the good roads meeting.

Divorce Suit Filed.

Alice Shaffer has filed suit for divorce against H. L. Shaffer alleging cruel and inhuman treatment.

KING GEORGE THE V.

ly cannot make it worse, not only because of the supreme badness of the other Georges, but because the people of England now rule the realm and the king has little opportunity for evil even if he had the disposition to be bad.

A Second Son.

The new king, whose full name is George Frederick Ernest Albert, is the second son of King Edward and Queen Alexandra. Born on June 3, 1895, he came next in line of succession through the death on Jan. 14, 1892, of his elder brother, Albert Victor Christian Edward.

As a lad the king had a very mischievous disposition, and his many pranks led his father to send him to sea "to tone him down a bit." He spent some years before the mast, got into a troublesome love affair, but finally emerged with serious habits and a reputation that has since clung to him of "the sailor prince of the British Isles."

The chief events of King George's life thus far have been his marriage and his trip around the world. On July 6, 1893, he was united to Princess Victoria Mary of Teck, popularly known as "Princess May," the granddaughter of the first Duke of Cambridge, Queen Victoria's uncle, a charming and cultured woman, who is now the less popular in England because she is the first English born wife of an English king since the time of James II.

They have six children, of whom the eldest, Prince Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David, will some day, if he lives, be king of England.

As William Howard Taft is the greatest traveler among American presidents, so George V. is the greatest traveler among English sovereigns. His Bacchante cruise represented no fewer than 54,679 miles.

During his colonial tour six years ago he and the queen traveled over 45,000 miles, of which 33,000 were by sea, and in all those journeys, with the exception of Port Said, he never set foot on any land where the union jack did not fly.

Again, on his famous trip to India the prince traveled 8,807 miles by railway alone. He spent twenty-eight nights in the train and delivered fifty speeches and performed a multitude of ceremonies.

Canada is better acquainted with the personality of King George than she was with that of King Edward, who only once visited the Dominion.

In the seven months during which he was away from home in 1901 the new king traveled 40,000 miles by water and many hundreds of miles on land, a total distance of more than twice around the world.

He left the country on his long tour as the Duke of Cornwall and York. A few days after his return on Nov. 8, 1901, he was given the title of Prince of Wales and Earl of Chester. In 1906 he paid a brief visit to India.

The king is devoted to outdoor sports and is regarded as one of the best tennis players in England. He also likes to play whist with members of his family and intimate friends.

During the last ten or fifteen years he has spent most of his time at home, visiting his estates and superintending the education of his children.

A Sedentary Life.

For that time his life has been called most unexciting, in marked contrast to that of his father. The old king, said a recent correspondent, "weighted with the crown, rushes up and down the land in motorcars and special trains, attending christenings, race meetings, receptions, garden parties, semi-state and state functions morning, noon and night."

"The son, whose only trouble seems book. He does absolutely nothing and does it with such a masterly inactivity as to rouse one almost to enthusiasm at the idea of how successfully this proud prince manages to while away his golden days.

"The prince, the princess and the rest of the family are up betimes, which means about 8 o'clock in the morning. There is the ordinary breakfast of a well to do English family, and the head of it beguiles the intervals between bacon and eggs with the morning papers. After breakfast there are charity letters to dictate to a secretary, for even the Prince of Wales is not exempt from the incessant stream of begging letters and appeals from charitable institutions which weight down the postman's bag at every delivery.

"Having completed this, the heaviest task of the day, the prince goes for a walk in St. James' park or Hyde park, accompanied by one of his equestrians who live in Marlborough House, and when this constitutional is over it is time to go back and prepare for luncheon. Sometimes there is a guest, but more often the meal is taken only in the company of one of the equestries and a lady of the princess' household. Luncheon over, there must be some stamps to sort. The prince's stamp collection is the finest in the world and is said to be worth more than $500,000. "Then comes another walk in the park and then a look to read mail at this time, when there are generally one or two visitors. Dinner, at half past 8 o'clock p. m., is quite informal, with a guest or two only here and there. If the royal couple go to the theater, dinner is set for 7, but as they do not often go to the theater the evening is spent quietly at home, the prince reading a book and the princess doing some useful fancy work with the needle.

"Bed at half past 10 o'clock p. m. Is this not truly a picture of beautiful domestic bliss? Nevertheless I am quite certain that when the Prince of Wales comes into his own he will surprise the British people by his mental grasp of affairs, his wide sympathy with all classes of the people and his inherited capacity for governing."

Growth of Popularity.

Lately, however, the prince, at the express command of his father, had taken a more active part in public affairs. With this increased activity there came an increase—or perhaps a more correct word would be a growth—of popularity, which probably pleased no one more than King Edward.

Like his father, the new king is not a good speaker. But he can say what he wishes to say, and, if he speaks tersely, it is always to the point, while he is an exceptionally able man of business. So far as can be judged, the new king's sympathies are not so wide as those of his father, but his interests are multifarious.

He is a practical expert on alships, and, of course, his naval knowledge is profound. Probably no one knows as much about hospital management as he does, and his speech some years ago about the Brussels exhibition won marked notice not only in England, but on the continent.

By inclination King George's tastes are sedentary, except that he is fond of shooting, but almost daily he rides for an hour.

The Sailor King.

Since he was called "the sailor prince," George V. will doubtless become known as "the sailor king."

He is a great lover of the sea, and he has often said that had he not been of royal blood he would have entered the navy and by hook or by crook have risen to the post of admiral. When as a youngster in 1877, a few days short of twelve years of age, he stepped aboard the Britannia at Dartmouth for a naval training he undertook exactly the same work as his fellow cadets. And later, when he passed into the navy and served with various warships in the seven seas, he spared himself no task that fell to the lot of others. Indeed, he frequently undertook duties which did not come within his sphere. "I wanted to learn my profession," he said, "and one doesn't become a sailor by walking up and down deck."

An English critic writing for an American paper once penned a sketch of the new king.

"Intellectually," the critic said, "he is a typical Guelph. He has not inherited his father's quick moving mind. His speeches are rather terrible performances to read or listen to. He has never quite found his platform legs. To do him justice, he had no desire to find them; he would far rather be on a quarterdeck. But he cannot escape the penalties of his position. Hardly a week goes by without his being obliged to deliver a public speech on some subject of which he probably knows nothing—of which, at any rate, he cannot possibly know more than the alphabet. A clever man would get used to such ordeals, would even learn how to emerge from them triumphantly. But fifteen years at sea is not a good preparation for this kind of work, and the prince gets no further than a few amiable commonplaces, awkwardly expressed. Very possibly the English public would prefer not to have it otherwise. A brilliant prince would strike a great many Englishmen as improper."

Commissioner Selder, from Cove, road supervisors from a large territory and many others interested in the movement, attended the meeting. Judge Webster and the government cannot force the people of Union county to build roads, but such propaganda as was planted last night will go far toward inciting immediate action.

Valley Highly Complimented.
Grande Ronds valley was highly complimented by the men. The two had been taken over a goodly portion of the valley yesterday afternoon and they had nothing but praise for it. "Your valley is extremely blessed with diversified interests," said Mr. Webster.

Roadmaker Campbell Complimented.
Macadam Road Builder J. F. Campbell was given much praise for the manner in which he is building the new macadam roads. His method is of the best, his workmanship above criticism and Union county is being equipped with the very best class of highways, according to both experts. The system used by the superintendent was also satisfactory to the men.
