

Laurelhurst

The Addition with Character

It was not necessary to put the steam shovel to work in Laurelhurst. Men could have done the grading just as well. But they could not have done it as quickly, and this is why it is there. Every improvement for all of Laurelhurst is going to be finished as rapidly as men, material, and modern labor-saving devices can be secured.

The shovel is now engaged in the work of grading the southwest quarter of Laurelhurst. The northwest quarter is practically finished.

We promised this northwest quarter completely improved by August 1, and it will be completed by that date. All grading is finished and water and sewer mains in. Laying sidewalks is progressing rapidly and the huge asphalt plant will be in operation, laying the asphalt street in a few days.

See Laurelhurst for yourself. See it and walk over the property. If you could only realize what this beautiful tract will be when completely improved, you would then realize its inevitable future. Nothing can hold Laurelhurst back. Its great natural advantages, its high grade improvements, its accessibility by four railroads, and its close proximity to town, and the low prices at which the most choice residence lots are being sold, make it the most ideal investment in Portland today.

TERMS 10 Per Cent down--2 Per cent a month

Just imagine it. Slightly residence lots, within the mile and one half circle, every modern improvement, rare natural advantages and excellent car service at original prices and on such terms. Every careful investor should see this property and secure some holding here. There will never again be such an opportunity.

THE ESSENTIAL PARTS OF THE EYE.

Those absolutely necessary to the perception of an object—are therefore the lens and the retina. If either of these be damaged so that it cannot perform its proper function, these can be no perception of objects by the eye. Yet, while these constitute the foundation of the eye, so to speak, there are various other parts of the organ which are essential to perfect vision, as it exists in the healthy eye. We can understand these parts by referring again to the photographer's camera. He employs lenses of different power, according to the distance of the object, which he wishes to picture upon the plate. If this object be situated close to the camera, the photographer must have a stronger lens, that is, one with a considerable curvature of the surface.

This is necessary, in order that the picture shall be accurately focused upon the plate at the back of the box.

If the object be, on the other hand, situated at a considerable distance, such as an extensive landscape, the photographer uses a weaker lens, that is, one that is not so curved.

Just so there must be a difference in the curvature of the lens in the human eye, at different times, for when we read small print, for instance, or examine objects situated close to the eye, the rays of light must be strongly focused in order to make a perfect picture on the retina; and when we look at distant objects the rays of light must be less strongly focused—that is, the lens must be flatter.

Now it is impossible to arrange for the difference in the eye as is done in the photographic camera, for in the latter case a stronger or weaker lens is put into the openings of the box, as occasion requires, several being kept on hand and changed according to the object desired. The eye is provided with only one lens, but by a most delicate arrangement this lens can be made to change its shape. It becomes more curved or flatter according as the individual looks at near or distant objects.

That the result is produced, as if the eye were provided with several lenses of different curvature, that is, the object, whether near or far, is focused so as to produce a perfect picture on the retina.
