WOULD DISQUALIFY LAND ENTRY

Government Charges that Mrs. Smith Made Illegal Stone Entry Here.

Government officials in the United States land department have not ceased their prosecution of alleged illegal timber claims in Eastern Oregon. The local land office has been ordered to proceed against a woman named Hattie M. Smith, charging that she made timber and stone entry with the intent of turning the timber over to the Oregon Lumber company, located at Baker City, and managed by Grant Geddes, Grant Geddes and David Eccles are now indicted charged with similar acts.

The order to the local officials means that the case will be given a hearing and a decision rendered. If it is found that the allegations are true, the title will not be turned over to the applicant, but will remain in the custody of the government. The entry was made in 1907, but has been held up pending investigation to this time.

DEFINITION AND SYMPTOMS OF CATARACT.

Written for the Benefit of the Public by Dr. M. P. Meudelsohn.

One of the most common diseases of the eye, and as little understood as it is prevalent, is "cataract." There are tens of thousands of persons who are suffering from this malady of the eye, all ignorant of its causes, its terrible effects, or the possibilities for its cure. Without using the many syllabled definitions of the medical books, cataract is an opacity of the crystalline lens.

In other words, the lens is not transparent, as it should be in the perfect eye, but instead, is clouded like a piece of ground glass, or a tumbler of water into which a few drops of milk have fallen. It is probably true that cataract, improperly treated, has been the cause of more blindness than any other disease of the organ of sight. It is equally true that cataract neglected is a menace to all future happiness, for it is impossible to tell at what time the growing dimness of vision may finally result in the eternal blackness, from which there is no rescue.

Cataracts are almost equally divided as to the sexes.

Hereditary influences may determine the occurrence of the cataract, in several ways. Certain occupations predispose to cataract, especially such as necessitate close application of the eyes to near work, or involve stooping positions or exposure to bright light, more particularly if light be combined with heat. Blows on the head, face or brow, shocks and jars of the body, may be followed by cataract. Degenerative changes in the blood vessels of the head, neck and eye, may result in cataract. In short, the causes are many and the danger depends upon proper treatment, and in securing that treatment, it is the patient's duty to find the method that is most effective and free from unpleasant results or the possibility of lasting injury.

Granulated eyelids is the most common and also one of the most dangerous diseases of the eye. It is so prevalent that thousands of persons have the affliction for many weeks before they are aware of it, ultimately awakening to the fact that their eyes have reached a condition that is hastening with a destructive pace toward a serious form. For the purpose of exemplifying the causes, and results of granulated eyelids, I desire to trace as fully as possibly the causes and symptoms of a trouble that has brought sorrow to so many thousands and has plunged them into the black pit of sightlessness.
