RANDELL NOT TO CAMPAIGN BEFORE PRIMARIES

UNABLE TO LEAVE THRESHING
MACHINE AT THIS TIME.

Promises to Administer Justice to
Men and Community if Elected.

Having been solicited by a number of friends to allow my name used before the republican primary for the nomination of sheriff of Union county, I do so with the understanding that I could not make a campaign before the county primary as I am so very busy threshing and will be so engaged for three weeks to come and it is impossible for me to get away from the machine. So if my friends are kind enough to nominate and under the condition elect me I would thank them very much of course and should I be nominated and elected I will to the best of my ability endeavor to enforce the laws as laid down in the statute of the state so far as consistent with good government.

I shall endeavor not to entail any useless expense upon the tax payers of the county and will administer justice to all parties and localities in the county irrespective of surrounding circumstances and will administer the office as economically as possible with efficient work.

Thanking each and everyone of you in advance for any favors you may see fit to render, I remain, yours very truly,

W. W. RANDALL.

Her Three Lovers

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

You wouldn't find another case like it in three states. Here was Miss Susie Jones of the village of Grafion, smart and good looking, with three lovers in tow. Each one had proposed marriage—each knew the other had—each was ready to die for her, and yet the three were good friends.

There was a family skeleton in the Jones closet, but none of the lovers suspected it. The smiling and gracious Susie had a temper like a wildcat. This was only shown out at home, however. Had any of the young men suspected it he would have reasoned that he could tame her after marriage. Had he been told it he would have replied that he admired temper in a girl. Love isn't blind. It's just woozy.

The three young men had dangled and sighed and grown thin for a year when the Methodist church held its annual picnic on the bank of the river half a mile below the village. The three of them escorted the young lady on that occasion. The three of them also had an intuition that that would be a momentous day for them. Intuition was right. Young Springer was the first to discover that it was. He invited Miss Susie to take a row with him on the surface of the historic Wabash. She graciously assented. No jealousy on the part of the other two. They would walk along the bank and be as happy as they could.

Young Springer had never rowed a boat. He had simply seen others do it. He did very well, however, for about ten minutes. That was because he let the craft drift, while he proposed marriage for about the seventh time. The answer was the same as it had always been. Miss Susie would see about it. This so encouraged the lover that he seized the oars and dipped a blade and splashed a barrel of water over the girl in white in the stern. She screamed. Then he splashed another barrel with the other oar. This completed the bath. Miss Susie rose up, and the boat was upset. It was for young Springer to rescue her. He would have done it slick as grease had she not, while clinging to the waterlogged craft, begun calling him names. It was dreadful the way she called him blunderhead, dunderhead, idiot, greenhorn, milksop, red head, squint eye and thirty other things. How could he rescue her with her tongue like that?

Young Springer, on a sand bar, and young Brown, on the bank, heard every word of the interesting discourse, but they were not a bit jealous. When Miss Susie had to stop talking and hunt around for some more breath she thought it time to continue on to the shore and go home for dry clothes. Young Brown had not plunged. He had a new pair of blue suspenders that had cost 25 cents, and he knew that if you get pale blue soaking wet it will crock a dollar shirt and add 2
