THE WINTEMUTE CASE.

Some Facts About an Affair in Which a Countess Figures.

"I am looking you straight in the eye."

This was the clever way in which one William T. Wintemute advertised his stock in the Gold Run Mining and Tunnel company of Boulder, Colo., and several hundred people returned his stare, thought him a handsome, straightforward looking chap and invested in his wares. And then the crash came, the postoffice inspectors recently arresting Wintemute, who, they allege, got $1,300,000 from valueless stock. The case is attracting much attention, especially abroad, for one of England's best known peeresses, the Countess of Tankerville, figures as one of the principal victims. She was formerly Miss Lenora Van Marter, a New York state girl, and is one of the few American girls who have made happy foreign marriages.

THE COUNTESS OF TANKERVILLE.

She and Lord Tankerville have always been in accord and are jointly interested in many philanthropies.

When Mr. Wintemute gets out of his present difficulty he should no longer handle stocks. His field is advertising. Here is one of his circulars:

"I am looking you straight in the eye when I say to you, exchange your worthless stock for Gold Run. Don't cringe nor squirm nor dodge my glance, but look at me—straight in the eye—and tell me why you don't exchange your worthless stock for Gold Run, paying 10 cents per share.

"This is a straight in the eye proposition. There is nothing partaking of the sneak or cringer about me, nor is there any occasion for one of you to dodge. Let us meet the issue fairly and squarely. You can be honest with me, with yourselves and your families and meet the issue which is before us now fearlessly, like a man."

Rate Hearing Set.

This is a similar case in which La Grande played an important part and in which much good has already resulted to inland empire towns.

Correction.
Typographical errors were responsible last week for W. R. Hamilton being reported as having brought suit against Dan Phillips for assault with a dangerous weapon. The initials should have been "R. D." Hamilton.

Fanning Addresses Two Large Audiences Yesterday.

Mr. J. Fanning, the Philadelphia author, lecturer and wit, entertained two large audiences yesterday, in the afternoon at the Baptist church and in the evening at the tabernacle. His subject was prohibition, but he interspersed it with so much humor and wit that the audience was highly pleased with the entire performance.

A Cowboy's Stratagem.

This is the headliner at the Isis this change of program. It is filled with thrilling scenes and brings out a well acted love story. It shows a bear hunt, where a real bear is treed and shot. The rest of the program is of unusually good quality, especially the film, Betty as Errand Girl. Tonight will be the last chance to witness this fine program.

San Francisco, Sept. 5—That the west's wail against the influx of Hindu laborers is bearing fruit is attested today by the arrival of the liner Siberia today with only twenty-two Hindus aboard, although 500 had applied. The steamship companies have been passing the word that only young Hindus under thirty and who are healthy will be allowed to enter this country.
