GIVE MONKS HOME.

Offer Haven to Expelled Churchmen of Portugal.

Walla Walla, Wash., Oct. 14—One of the most atique plans for publicity and increasing the population of the Walla Walla valley is that just brotched to the Commercial club, and taken up by the publicity department, whereby an effort will be made to bring the monks and nuns expelled from Portugal by the newly formed republic to this valley.

Publicity Manager L. M. Brown will write at once to the American consul at Lisbon to get information concerning the best manner to go about this novel matter.

There are several reasons why the publicity department would like to secure the friars. It is pointed out, for example, how tourists visit California to look at the old missions. Missions in and around Walla Walla would add much to its picturesqueness and it is for this reason, as much as anything else, that the move is planned.

Then again, the wineries of Spain and Portugal, operated by the monks are everywhere famous. There is no place where grapes can be raised better than in the Walla Walla valley, and if the expelled churchmen are brought here, it is probable they would plant immense vineyards.

By order of the newly chosen president of Portugal, all the monks and nuns are to be expelled from the country. As in the case of the Dominicans several years ago, they will come to America.
