PEOPLES FORUM.

The editor of the Observer has a faculty for getting things twisted. He speaks of Mr. McAllister's idea of arraying the country against the city. I thought that that was the charge of the Home Ruin Association. They started the wall that the farmers have no right to a voice in deciding the matter of the control of the liquor business in the county. I believe the editor is a member of the association that is the father of that misshapen thing. He seems to be a little ashamed of it.

Two years ago we were told that if local option carried in the county La Grande would be ruined, grass would grow in our streets, houses and store rooms would be vacant, no building would be done, and all sorts of dire predictions were made. Now it sounds funny to have a wet man write about claims made for prohibition. He was not here and does not know what claims were made. But it is a fact that no honest man can deny that we do not now have as vile places in La Grande as we did before we had prohibition. And before the near beer joints were licensed we had a fair enforcement of the law, and conditions were good as the police records will show.

Another example of wet logic is shown in the reference to the two murder trials. Mr. McAllister's argument, which is unanswerable, is that if the farmer is to have no voice in the disposition of the liquor traffic in La Grande which is such a prolific cause of crime, then he should have no part in the payment of the taxes which must meet those expenses. That is fair and just. Now the county is the unit in the matter of the criminal laws in force throughout the county. If the communities had some privileges which were the cause of the crimes committed then the argument of the editor would be germane. But great is wet logic!

There is either inexcusable ignorance or contemptible and shameless demagoguery exhibited in the speeches of men and in the writing of others about the search and seizure provision of the local option law. Rose struck a dramatic attitude and declared something about his dead body and any effort to enter his home without due process of law. Well, he ought to know that the law requires due process of law before any home can be entered. It is virtually the same provision as the law about stolen goods. It is the same provision as we now have in our prohibition law. How many homes of our citizens have been entered at midnight to search for liquor? How many apartments of our wives and daughters have been ruthlessly entered by the heartless officials in the last two years? These speeches and these written harangues and these posters are about as mean and despicable as anything that can be attempted. When men resort to such things there cause is desperate.

Rose and Darrow do not agree. Rose endeavored to show that the liquor traffic was a great financial asset in the country. Darrow said that the liquor traffic was of no economic advantage to the country. I think Darrow is much more of a political economist than Rose and he had the good sense not to undertake the impossible. Darrow said he had only one objection to prohibition. He thinks it interferes with a man's personal liberty.

We all prize our liberty. But does Prohibition interfere with our liberty unduly or differently than other laws? Under regulation women are not allowed in saloons. Their liberty is interfered with. A man is not allowed to keep a cow and chickens in some cities. His liberty is interfered with. A man is not allowed to build a frame structure in certain limits of the city. His liberty is interfered with. A member of a man's family is stricken with smallpox. A yellow flag is put up, and the man is not permitted to leave his premises. His liberty is interfered with. A thief is denied the right to take things of value by stealth. His personal liberty is interfered with. So we might continue. It is really affecting to hear these men split the air and see them swing their arms and stamp their feet when they reach the personal liberty part of the program. Especially is it so when we remember the personal liberty they are pleading for. It is the liberty to pour booze down their throats, to paint their noses red, to get bleary eyes, to make themselves in a condition to go home and break up their furniture, abuse their wives and children, commit murder, become a public charge, disgrace themselves and those who love them, and fill a drunkard's grave and meet eternal shame, for the good Book says that no drunkard shall inherit eternal life. That is wonderful liberty for which to storm about. Now the Supreme Court of the United States and many of the Supreme Courts of the states have declared that prohibition does not interfere with any just rights of any individual, and President Jordan says we have the same right to prohibit saloons as we have to prohibit cesspools. And so we may believe that prohibition will do no man an injury. It will enlarge the liberties of a host of women and children, and men, too.
