

CURED TO STAY CURED.

How La Grande Citizens Can Find Complete Freedom From Kidney Troubles.

If you suffer from backache—From urinary disorders—From any disease of the kidneys, Be cured to stay cured. Doan's Kidney Pills make lasting cures.

Grateful people testify. Here's one case of it: Mrs. William Beirneaux, 2130 Colorado, St., Baker City, Ore., says: "My kidneys were badly disordered as the result of a cold I contracted and I suffered from an almost constant backache. To go up or down stairs caused severe pains throughout my body and I was also annoyed by headaches and dizzy spells. Reading of Doan's Kidney Pills, my husband procured a supply and the contents of two boxes cured me. I shall always give Doan's Kidney Pills my endorsement. (Statement given November 3, 1907.)

A LASTING EFFECT.

On May 26, 1910 Mrs. Beardneaux said: "The cure Doan's Kidney Pills made in my case has been permanent. Whenever I have the opportunity, I recommend this remedy."

Sleeps With Dead Man.

Awaking this morning to find his bedfellow dead was the unpleasant experience of Mike Loftus, a laborer, who has been employed in digging the tunnel through Horseshoe curve at Coe. The dead man is Frank Fahey, also a laborer, who has been employed at the same place. Loftus and Jack Gleason another laborer and companion of the dead man, were arrested this morning and are being held as witnesses for the coroner's inquest to be held at 5 o'clock this evening, says the Pendleton East Oregonian.

It was first thought that another murder mystery had appeared, but that "snow" was the cause of death is now the opinion held by several of those who have followed the development in the somewhat mysterious case. "Snow" is the dope fiend's name for morphine.

In company with his two companions, Fahey came to Pendleton from Coe yesterday morning. They were each possessed of a limited amount of money and apparently they were also each possessed with a desire to spend it. Fahey spent a part of his money for a pair of shoes and tobacco and then proceeded to spend the remainder for near beer and other obtainable beverages, according to the testimony of witnesses. Along in the afternoon they were heard to remark that they were going to buy some "snow." The witness says he did not know what "snow" is but according to Dr. Waffle it is the name applied to morphine by users of the drug.

According to Ole Oleson, proprietor of the Queen Chop and Rooming house the three men came to this place about 8 o'clock last evening. At that time Fahey was so far under the influence of liquor or something else that he had to be helped to his room. When Oleson left the room the three men were together.

This morning Loftus came down and greeted the proprietor of the place with the statement, "You've got a stiff up there." An investigation revealed the dead body of Fahey in the bed with his clothes on. The officers were immediately notified. Coroner Folsom took charge of the body. Chief of Police Gurdane arrested Loftus and Sheriff Taylor took Gleason into custody.

then said that she would take the matter under advisement and in a day or two let him know her decision. This was satisfactory to Ben, who went away and gave that portion of his future no further thought until he received her reply, which was this:

"Accepted on condition that you spend half your fortune within the year, the other half to be settled on me on the day of our marriage."

Ben could understand the last part of this contract, but not the first part. Why should Della stipulate that he should spend what he proposed to spend? But he was bent on carrying out his design.

He did carry out his design, and his wife helped him. His swelling gave him no pain, and the shadow of death that hung over him alone prevented his enjoyment. His wife, whenever she saw that he was under the influence of his expected ending, would propose some new pleasure, and as pleasure usually cost money her husband's share of the fortune rapidly melted. Finally the year was up, and Ben had spent it all.

"What's to be done now, Ben?" asked his wife. "You are still living and no worse physically than when we were married."

"I don't know," said Ben. "Doubtless I have been kept up by having my mind taken off my affliction." "I think there is a good deal in that," said his wife. "If your share of our fortune has kept you alive a year perhaps my share will keep you alive another year. We will continue our expenditures."

Ben looked at her, astonished. He knew that she would much prefer to live a quiet life, and by this proposition she showed that she would rather have him for another year than the independence guaranteed her at their marriage. He doubted her sincerity.

"Thank you very much for the remaining year," he said. For a month the expenditures proceeded as before, Ben every day expecting that his wife would call for a reduction. Not a comment escaped her. Then Ben said to her:

"Della, I thought this was a business deal between us."

"So it was on your part."

Ben got up from where he was sitting, went to her and put his arms about her. Presently he said:

"I think I would like to live."

"I wish you could."

"Maybe that doctor was wrong after all."

"I don't know anything about that."

"I think I'll try another."

He did try another and another. Indeed, he tried a number, but they all told him the same story as the first. At last he found a specialist who referred all bodily troubles to one cause. This cause happened to hit Wharton's case. The doctor said that something was dragging him down. If he could be relieved of that something he would have more strength to throw off disease and he might be sufficiently stimulated to throw off the swelling in his neck. Ben's eyes were a bit crooked, and the doctor by an operation straightened them. The swelling disappeared.

"I don't see any connection," said Ben, "between the eyes and a swelling in the neck."

"And I haven't time to explain it to you," replied the doctor. "A thousand dollars, please."

Early Landholding.

Nothing is clearer than the fact that the system of landholding in the most ancient races was communal. Private right in land was for a long time unknown, the source of life being held in common between the members of the tribe. Not only land, but all property that in any way had to do with the general welfare, was looked upon as belonging to the whole tribe in common, no individual having the right to call it his own. Gradually and after a very long time, under the old regime, the right of private ownership began to creep in until at last it became the recognized rule pretty nearly everywhere.—New-York American.

The Front End.

A young couple had been married by a Quaker, and after the ceremony he remarked to the husband:

"Friend, thou art at the end of thy troubles."

A few weeks after the man came to the good minister boiling over with rage, having found his wife to be a regular vixen, and said:

"I thought you told me I was at the end of my troubles."

"So I did, friend, but I did not say which end," replied the Quaker.

Way It Goes.

"Give 'em what they want, my boy," said the old physician.

"For instance?" inquired the young medico.

"Well, many a woman will take oxygen treatment at $5 a throw who wouldn't spend far fare for fresh air."—Washington Herald.

What a Doomed Man Did

By SALLIE MENDHAM

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

When Ben Wharton was seventeen it was necessary for him to go to work to support a widowed mother and a younger sister. He worked all day and usually most of the night, saving all his mother and sister did not need and investing it. His ambition was to accumulate a competence and then enjoy a world which he considered only enjoyable for those who have plenty of money. When he was twenty-five his mother died, and soon after this his sister married. At thirty-five he found himself in possession of $200,000 and no one to provide for except himself.

Then something happened—he noticed a swelling on his neck. He consulted a physician, who after making an examination said to him:

"Do you wish me to tell you the truth?"

"I certainly do."

"Well, then, what you have on your neck is either a tumor or a cancer. It lies directly over the jugular vein. If it is a cancer it will eat into that vein, and you will bleed to death. If it is a tumor it will so encroach upon the vein as to stop the flow of blood, and you will die from that cause."

Wharton was a philosophic man, and philosophers usually have views of their own. He concluded to spend his money in having a good time while he lived. But he must have a companion to enjoy it with him.

The only person whose company he enjoyed was a Miss Della Thorne. She was poor and was getting to that age where but few women marry. Wharton went to see her and made her the following proposition: "If you will marry me," he said, "and join me in the expenditure of half my fortune you shall have the other half when I die, which the doctor tells me will be in about a year." And he informed her of his condition.

Miss Thorne was a very self contained young woman. She set her mind at Wharton after this manner: "I will marry you for the money, but I will not
