"Water Wagon" at Eugene.
University of Oregon, Eugene, Ore., Jan. 14 (Special)—The typhoid epidemia, which caused so much alarm among the students at the university and the townspeople of Eugene is now completely under control. While the situation never reached the alarming state pictured by the newspapers, the city council and the University faculty took the matter in hand the latter part of December, publishing stringent regulations insisting upon the use of boiled water and other sanitary measures, with the immediate result of stopping the spread of the disease. Only two new cases have broken out in the last three weeks, in both of which the infection probably occurred before the boiled water plan was enforced. All danger is practically over now, as the students are exceedingly careful, insisting on boiled water, not only for drinking purposes, but also for cleansing the teeth and washing their faces.

The "water wagon" is a familiar sight about the campus and university. Thrice each day the university, under the personal direction of Prof. Sweetser, state biologist, sends out a wagon load of huge water tanks, one for each club and fraternity, and inspectors in each club house personally see that only the water in the tanks are used.

In view of the fact that the situation is now completely under control, the "water wagon" seems to some to be rather farcical in its mission. Nevertheless President Campbell is firm in insisting that college authorities, boil and deliver all water used, until such a time as the city water shall be declared absolutely pure and free from the deadly typhoid germ. The new city filter plant will be in use early in February.

CHURCH AND STATE

By AGATHA L. BREWER

Cawky Jack was the sobriquet applied to one of the most villainous demons that ever infested any of the territories belonging to the United States. His name was said to be John Biggers, but that was only surmised from the fact that on one occasion, having killed a man and been arrested, he had been called upon to give his name and had given that one.

For a long while Cawky Jack was accustomed to put people out of his way by means of small round leaden balls. It was a very inexpensive way of doing it, and at the time there was no one in a position to make open objection. But the original venomous nest occupied by Jack grew to be a hamlet, then a town with a church.

The deacons of the church finally came to consider that the place had outgrown Cawky Jack. He must either be reformed or got rid of. At a meeting of the deacons it was decided to send a committee to the desperado to announce to him that he must either come within the fold of the church or stop killing people or "git out." Jack sent back word that he was not prepared to become a Christian and he didn't propose to leave a place in which he had lived so long and "whose boneyard he had done so much to fill."

At a meeting of the deacons to hear the report of the committee Deacon Riggs from Tennessee, who before his conversion had done the next most to Jack in filling the said boneyard, got up and spoke as follows:

"Brethren, I reckon we'n all air reckensiled to the fac' that the sinner must be removed, pervided it kin be done accordin' to Scripture. Now, I hold that the good book doesn't no-whar forbid us to strike down the enemies o' the Lord. It does say that 'he who smites with the sword shall perish by the sword,' or words to that effect. But whar, I'd like to know, does it say anything about the revolver? I move that after pra'r we resolve ourselves into a committee to go forth, and the first one of us that meets Cawky Jack opens fire."

The speaker sat down, and Brother Hargan arose.

"I think," said Hargan, "that I kin name a better way than that. I recyemend that we offer a twenty dollar bill to any man as 'll shoot Cawky Jack."

Since nobody wished to take a personal part in the job, the motion found favor with the brethren. Hargan was empowered to make the offer, and the meeting adjourned.

The next morning a notice appeared on the church door stating that anybody who would shoot Cawky Jack would receive $20 from the church funds. The object of this notice, sauntering by the church, saw it and read it. He went on very thoughtful. The
