LOCAL THEATRES

"The Climax," one of the most successful plays of the last decade comes to the Steward theatre. It is a sweet little story, not without its shadows but none the less appealing on that account. It involves the happiness of just four people, a beautiful girl who loves music and has a wonderful voice, an old music teacher who has a heart of gold, an impatient, talented young teacher and composer, and a worldly young physician, the last two in love with the singer.

The cast is composed of only these four and yet there is not a minute when the interest lags. The author has woven the thread, uniting their lives so firmly that there is never anything lacking in the picture. The story runs easily and swiftly to a high dramatic point and the ending, well, you will not find fault with it.

"The Climax" created a great stir in the large cities. First excited curiosity because the cast was so small but in a few days everyone was talking about the worth of the play and its fame has grown steadily. Members of the original Weber company appear in the cast which presents the play in this city, Wednesday Feb. 1.

PENDLETON AFTER EATS.

High School Girls There Decide Fresh men Girls Must Drop All Extras.

No more the rate that you so love Which make all men to stare, And ridicule the way in which You bundle up your hair. No more the puffs you think so sweet No more the bobbing curls For all false hair must be tabooed By all you freshmen girls.

Such is the substance of a portion of the edict which was formulated yesterday afternoon by the co-eds of the school and the announcement of which created consternation in the ranks of the freshman followers of Dame Fashion this morning. The framers of this order of interdiction have taken a firm stand and declare they will enforce it, even if they have to resort to physical violence. For, they assert, there are some of the weaker sex numbered in the infant class, who so far from exhibiting any evidence of the modesty which so becomes a freshman, presume to set themselves up as the foremost followers of fashion's dictates. It is not their presumption, though, that they would punish, these girls declare, but their folly they would correct. In the ignorance of their immaturity and in their deluded sense of the eternal fitness of things feminine, they are making themselves ridiculous in the very eyes they fain would please and it is to save them from this humiliation that the edict was drawn up.

Not only is the upholstered head put under the ban but so also is the hand painted cheek. If false hair is had, declare the upper class girls, then a false face is worse and they say will not tolerate any freshman co-ed entering the portals of the high school building with their cheeks aglow with a serene blush that is unchangeable in all weathers and under all circumstances.

FINE HOGS BROUGHT HERE.

Pendleton Markets Must Hunt up Union County to Meet the Demands.

Union county is the mecca for the searchers after good food products, extra fine horses and a varied line of other assets, is what the Grande Ronde valley is rapidly coming to mean. Surrounding counties are depending largely on Union county to supply the pork supply, and the following from the Pendleton East Oregonian is an example:

This afternoon Pendleton was treated to an object lesson in intensified farming when a drove of hogs, 90 in number, shipped in from Union county by Messrs. Schwartz & Greulich, were driven down Webb street to the company's slaughter house.

"The hogs cost $2,000 and we purchased them in Union county because they were not to be had here," said Henry Schwartz as the big porkers waddled down Webb street. The hogs were raised near the town of Union and they are a fine lot of Berkshires. They are very uniform in size, each weighing in the vicinity of 260 pounds. They were purchased through James McKennon, a Union county dealer.
