The tin servers, or platters, have the invitation printed in red on them and are both unique and original to say the least. Several local people, friends of Mr. and Mrs. Stackland, have been favored with the novel invitations.

Wouldn't It Make You Cackle if YOU Had a Hen Worth $12,000 ?

Speaking of chickens, which are from Missouri and other places on the map, here you are shown one that is worth as much as half a dozen touring cars or three ordinary houses and lots or a hundred acre farm in Iowa or 12,000 Angora goats. In some places Angoras are so unpopular that you can buy them for a dollar apiece. This hen, Lady Washington by title and family name, is said to be valued at just $12,000. Wouldn't that make you cackle? Well, we should scratch! Lady Washington belongs to a firm of poultrymen at Scranton, Pa., who recently received by wire an offer of $6,000 for her from a Philadelphia millionaire chicken fancier, who coveted her so that he could show her off at the Philadelphia poultry show. The firm wired back: "Your offer of $6,000 not accepted. Our Black Orpington hen Lady Washington cannot be bought until after the Scranton show. We will then consider an offer of $12,000." When Lady Washington drinks she can use the prize cup she won as the best bird at the recent poultry show in New York. If any reckless millionaire fancier killing her for his table he will set before his guests the costliest meat ever cooked, for Lady Washington weighs just ten pounds, and even little Willie can figure out that that is $1,200 a pound. The eggs from this phenomenal chicken sell for $25 apiece, so that if one should call for ham and Lady Washington eggs—say three fried—his breakfast would cost him $75.15, the 15 cents being for the ham. It is a real pity that that western prospector who suddenly struck a gold mine and went to New York to get a square meal at Delmonico's could not have had "ham and" with Lady Washington's eggs as the "and" part. He couldn't read the French menu, so finally he said to the waiter, "Oh, dad blame it, just fetch me a hundred dollars' worth o' ham an' eggs."
