WHIRLING SPRAY IRRIGATION

SPOKANE COUNTRY EXPERIMENTING WITH SYSTEM.

Is Growing in Popularity and May Soon Become General.

Spokane, Wash., June 2.—(Special)—Irrigation by means of whirling sprinklers is to be carried out on an extensive scale in the Quincy district in Grant county, Washington, upon a large tract of land a few miles south of Winchester. The apparatus, especially designed for the experiment, is larger and of greater capacity than the sprinklers ordinarily used on city lawns. Water will be lifted from a deep well by a double action pump driven by a gasoline engine.

In making the foregoing announcement at his headquarters in Spokane, Stephen O. Jayne, irrigation investigator for the United States department of agriculture, said that owing to the irregularity of the land and the sandy character of the soil a large expense would be involved to properly grade it for irrigation by ordinary methods, and he added, it is to avoid this outlay, as well as to secure a more economical use of water than would be possible otherwise, that the experiment is to be carried on.

"The irrigation branch of the department of agriculture is conducting experiments throughout Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana and other states," Mr. Jayne continued, "with a view of determining the practicability of the various methods and it is believed that the knowledge so gained will result in a material saving and increased efficiency in the use of valuable water supplies."

"While irrigation by the use of whirling sprinklers is not a new idea, having been successfully and profitably practiced in various places in connection principally with truck-farming operations, it is something of an innovation to undertake the watering of general field crops by this method."

"Apple growers in the vicinity of Chelan, Washington, are this season installing sprinkling systems" also, and during the summer the whirlers will be going in many orchards."

Small brass nozzles are screwed into the parallel pipes at intervals or from three to four feet and when the system is in operation thousands of tiny streams shoot forth, producing a result almost like natural rain over the area between the nozzle lines.

The pipes are so arranged that they can be revolved to give the jets whatever angles is desired in leaving the nozzles.

The state of Washington has now about a dozen installations of this type and the system also is growing in popularity in Oregon and California.

Sprinkling by whatever system is a more expensive way of irrigating than by means so far commonly employed and it will doubtless be some time before it is very generally practiced, but in places where water is very expensive or where the land is either too irregular to permit of grading or so sandy that heavy losses occur by deep percolation, irrigation by some system of sprinkling may often be profitably done. Costs of installation and operation are heavy for such systems, however, and intensive farming, yielding large returns per acre, must be the rule where sprinkling systems are employed.

Lighting Economy

"If electric lights were as economical as coal oil lamps, we'd all use them."

—but wait a minute. What do you call economy? Is it economy to impair your health with ill-smelling lamps that burn up the life-giving oxygen in the air?

Is it economy to strain your eyes using a dim yellow light that smokes and flickers.

Is it economy to run the terrible risk—fire and explosion—that is ever present when coal oil lamps are used?

These are not economies; they are dangers. Electricity furnishes a cool steady light, that leaves the air pure; that won't flicker, and can't explode. All you need to do is press the button, and it's ready any time.
