"TALE OF TWO CITIES" ELABORATELY PRESENTED

Three Reels of One Thousand Feet Each Taken to Tell Story

"A Tale of Two Cities," by Charles Dickens, is the first of a series of evenings with the world's greatest writers, and the Peoples' Amusement company has wisely selected to inaugurate this new departure in motion picture entertainments, with one of the best novels ever written by this great English author.

"The Tale of Two Cities" is in three reels and each reel being 1,000 feet in length, this one picture will make up the show to the length of the program usually run at the Arcade theatre, at which place this noted film will be first exhibited.

The Vitagraph company has been working on this series for half a year. The production requires every star artist in their organization in the chief roles, and at least 50 additional actors in the smaller parts. The mobs require not less than 1,000 supernumeraries; the scenery is by far the most realistic ever seen; the costuming is selected with most exacting care. The entire photo play is on a greater scale of magnificence than has ever before been attempted, and more than all, both the author and stage director have faithfully adhered to the story as set down by Charles Dickens. There is not a single foot of film wasted; every bit means much, and the whole play is enacted in a way that grips the mind. One cannot get away from the stronghold it has over the senses; it appeals to all classes; it tells wonderfully and yet horribly, the injustice practiced in the name of liberty while France trembled in the throes of the "Reign of Terror."

The tale begins about the year 1753, in France, and in the most graphic and realistic manner shows the nobility of the nobility of France towards the poorer class, as well as their exaction in the way of taxation and their utter disregard of the conditions, the starvation that then prevailed in unfortunate France. The Marquis d'Evermond, utterly ignoring all the rights of humanity, has cruelly killed a peasant, and because Dr. Manette, a learned and honorable physician, refuses to aid in the concealment of the crime, the medical man is secretly imprisoned in the bastille, that sinkhole of royal iniquity. Meanwhile the doctor's wife dies and a faithful servant, Lafarge, has taken Lucy, their daughter, and because Dr. Manette, a learned and honorable physician, refuses to aid in the concealment of the crime, the medical man is secretly imprisoned in the bastille, that sinkhole of royal iniquity. Meanwhile the doctor's wife dies and a faithful servant, Lafarge, has taken Lucy, their daughter, who becomes a cherished ward of Tellson's bank in England. The girl grows up to beautiful womanhood and all innocently wins, but does not return, the love of Sidney Carton, a young English barrister of dissolute habits, but who, in reality possesses rare nobility of soul.

Time rolls on, bringing in its train the French revolution and the "Reign of Terror." For 19 long weary years Dr. Manette has remained a secret prisoner in the bastille. He, at length, secures his freedom, leaving behind, however, in his cell, a history of his imprisonment, in which he calls down God's eternal vengeance on the Marquis d'Evermond and all his family even to the remotest generation. After his release, Dr. Manette is taken to England and there together with his daughter, they live a life of happiness.

Charles Darney, a young son of the Marquis, has renounced his title to nobility, and after giving his property for the benefit of the common people, has settled in England and falls in love with Lucy, who, after gently refusing Sidney Carton, marries the man of her choice. This refusal does not embitter Carton, but has a tendency to elevate his character so that thereafter he lives only that he may serve the woman he loves, with life or death if need there be.

An old servant of the family, Lafarge, being in danger of losing his life, can only be saved by the return of Charles Darney to France. He reaches Paris at a time when the people are frenzied with a taste of unbridled license and liberty; they seize him, and after a mere mockery of a trial, Darney is condemned to the guillotine, merely because in his veins flows royal blood.

Sidney Carton, after learning of Darney's and the mystery which will be entailed upon the woman he worships, goes to Paris, bribes the prison keepers, and succeeds in substituting himself for Charles Darney with the terrible consequence that he goes to execution in order that Lucy may be happy with her husband.

PEACE CAN BE HAD.

International peace may be had for the asking if the people of the United States will ask for it now in this psychological moment. It is so easy. If only the senate would adopt this treaty with Great Britain with a unanimous voice! Then we can go on to other countries. We have taken the leadership in this great movement for peace. Why should we now hold back? President Butler of Columbia University

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

Train your children along the line of their interest. If your boys enjoy horses give them good stories of horses to read. If the girls love fairy tales read them the best and most beautiful fairy stories you can find. Give them a variety of interesting stories to read. Try to create in them a love for beautiful poetry, and, above all, don't give your children "vinegar" books to read. Your boy has been reading trashy novels or your girl silly love stories. It is your duty to overcome that evil with good by reading to them or with them fine, high minded literature. It is a good plan to give your child a shelf in the bookcase for his own favorite books. Then keep him supplied with new books and you will soon find he is intensely interested in collecting his own library of useful, valuable books.—Professor F. H. Green.

For summer diarrhoea in children always give Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and castor oil, and a speedy cure is certain. For sale by all dealers.
