POINTERS FOR MOTORISTS

RUST AN ENEMY TO RUBBER AND IT DESTROYS TIRES.

Rust May be Removed from Rims with Fine Emery Paper.

Rust is an enemy of rubber. It will pay the motorist to inspect occasionally the condition of the rims on the wheels of his car, especially if the outer surfaces of the envelopes near the beads look rusty. This discoloration is rust caused by rusted rims. This rust if not arrested will gradually eat through the rubber, attacking the canvas of the envelope. In time the edges of the rusted rims will become more and more uneven, tearing and eventually destroying the beads. Furthermore, rust works in between the beads and the rims leaving space for water which also damages the rubber.

To remove rust from a rim, the tire should be taken off and the rusty parts rubbed clean with coarse emery paper. Then smooth the surface with finer emery paper and re-japan the rim, applying one coat to the outside and two to the inside, making sure first that the surface is smooth, and free from rust. Roughness may be quickly detected by running the hand along the edge of the rim. When the edge of the rim is too uneven for the use of emery paper, first use a file after which emery paper may be used for finishing.

The proper care of tires and rims is thoroughly treated in the two complimentary books of instruction published by the Michelin Tire Company of Milltown, New Jersey.

BOTH HANDS GONE, OHIO PRODIGY IS CRACK RIFLE SHOT

Winemiller Carries Gun with a Leathern Thong and Loads the Magazine with His Mouth.

THEN HE PULLS THE TRIGGER WITH TEETH.

Wins Many Matches Against Men Who Are Whole, but Objects to Term "Freak."

(Special to the N. Y. World.) WPAKONETA, O., April 15.—Possessing only the stump of an arm on the left side, and no arm at all on the right side, and using his teeth to pull the trigger, Al Winemiller is conceded to be one of the most amazing rifle shots in Ohio, if not in the United States, as a statement that will be attested by all who entered into competition with him, either in shooting at clay pigeons, live birds or a bull's-eye target. So far as is known there is no living man handicapped as he is who has made such a record, and not for the purpose of revenue or exhibition, but purely for the love of a sport that he has followed from boyhood. He would rather win a match with no stakes at all than forego the pleasure of the competition. His winnings since the 1st of January have been two quarters of beef, one beef hide and one dollar in cash. What makes Winemiller's performance all the more extraordinary is the fact that he did not lose his right arm until fifteen months ago. His left hand was caught in the cog of a traction engine and crushed into pulp in 1893, and an amputation above the wrist became necessary. Up to that time he had been an enthusiastic hunter, always scoring a shotgun and employing a rifle exclusively, even in the shooting of small game. He had a wonderful eye for range, and with his old one-shot rifle and black powder charges, instead of the metallic cartridge that he uses now, he made some wonderful scores. His accuracy of aim continued even after his hand had been crushed and removed. This accident did not interfere with his love of his chosen sport any longer than it took the stump to heat and to enable him to devise a strap hold which he used in lieu of a hand.

Arm Gone, Keeps on Shooting.

In January, 1910, Winemiller's right arm was caught in a four-inch belt running from a bolt cutter in the shop of the Wusek Wheel Company. He was drawn up to the line shaft and whirled around until his arm was mashed and mangled close up to the shoulder socket. The surgeons took it off entirely. Winemiller made a marvelous recovery, and as soon as he was able to be about he began devising means to enable him to keep on shooting. He bought a twenty-two repeating Remington and had a hole bored in his mouth. This device was made under his direction by a gunsmith, and then he went off into the woods where former city caused the champions to beat it for other parts.

"DEAD SHOT" HAS NO HANDS; PULLS TRIGGER WITH TEETH.

WINEMILLER PULLING TRIGGER WITH HIS TEETH. READY TO CLIMB FENCES.

no one would see him so that he could practice and carry out the plan he had in view.

This town is sixty miles north of Dayton, in the gas and coal region, and almost everybody within a radius of forty miles knows the armless marksman, and is proud of his skill and courage in continuing in a sport after being crippled in a manner that would have discouraged ninety men out of a hundred.

When Winemiller is ready to go in to action he selects a stump or a fallen log, wiggles out of his coat, shakes the box of cartridges out of a specially prepared pocket, removes the lid with his teeth and dumps the cartridges on the ground. Then—and always to the amazement of a veteran marksman—he places his Remington at rest, with the muzzle pointing upward, holding it in position with a leathern thong strapped to the stump of his left arm, leans over and presses the spring of the magazine with his teeth, causing the receptacle to open. With his mouth he drops in the cartridges. The magazine is snapped into place by pressing the top against a tree stump, and the armless shooter, again employing his teeth, puts on the cartridge box lid and returns the box to the pocket in his coat. Then he lifts the stock of the rifle to his armless socket and draws a bead on the object at which he intends to shoot. The thong is in the form of a loop, fastened to the barrel, and is slipped over the headless stump, holding the gun rigidly in position.

PRESSES LIPS, GUN IS FIRED.

Those who see this exemplification of necessity being the mother of invention are somewhat perplexed to know how Winemiller will pull the trigger with his teeth and avoid deflecting or raising the muzzle of the rifle. He has made provision for this by having the breech mechanism so delicately adjusted that the trigger is what might be termed a superlative hair trigger. By contracting his lips he is able to draw the taut wire just the merest fraction of an inch without the slightest movement of his head. The cartridge is exploded and the bullet is driven to its target.

The armless marksman has such a steady nerve that he can stand perfectly motionless for one minute and hold his rifle in position without showing a tremor.

Notwithstanding his great affliction Winemiller is cheerful, courageous and is eager to enter the lists against all comers as he was when he had two arms. He has a clear piercing eye, a square jaw and a laughing, kindly expression.

He can leap ditches and climb fences with his gun strapped to the stump of his left arm with as much agility as any man of his age, and he can outrun most of them. He wants to practice now for clay pigeon shooting so that he may enter contests at county fairs.

Winemiller has a great horror of being regarded as a freak, and under no circumstances could he be induced to display his marksmanship for pay. He is one of the most highly respected citizens in the community, and is proud of the fact that he has had the patience and perseverance to bring his shooting up to the present state of perfection by the invention of the strap and using his teeth to pull the hair trigger.
