BEETLES MENACE FORESTS

YELLOW PINE DISTRICT IN SERIOUS DANGER.

Pests Working Havoc with Finest Forest in the Country.

That the great yellow pine belt extending from Bend to Crescent is badly infested with the pine beetle and that a considerable quantity of the timber in that section has been killed by the beetle is the statement of William B. Turner, in charge of the co-operative work in the forest insect investigation at this place, who has returned from a three weeks' auto trip through that section, says the Baker Herald. Mr. Turner made the trip at the request of the owners of the timber.

He is now at work on his report to the bureau of entomology, department of agriculture. This body of yellow pine is known as one of the largest in area and finest in quality in the country.

His trip covered the country in the Black Butte district at the head of the Metolus river to Crescent at the headwaters of the Deschutes river. The depredations of the insects began about ten years ago.
