BATTIS WONDER OF THE DAY

CHARACTERIZATION OF 13 MOLES DONE WITH ELEGANCE.

Well Told Description of Man Coming Here Next Week.

William Sterling Battis who appears in his celebrated lecture "Life Portrayals" from the Dickens' novels, illustrating 13 of the most prominent characters in costume and will appear at the chautauqua Saturday evening, July 8th, is talked of by the "Lyceumite" in this tone:

In his "Life Portrayals" Mr. Battis has something entirely new to the platform. It is so different, so delightfully entertaining, and with such an undercurrent of literary and educational value, that it is sure to do much in the promotion of his growing popularity.

Only the deep students of Dickens do what Mr. Battis does in this entertainment.

In make up and costume Mr. Battis portrays 13 of Dickens' most famous characters. He does not suggest the characters—they are flesh and blood creations—they are as real and diversified as any 13 strong characterizations one might pick from the stage. The makeup of each character is complete, and the costumes are historically correct. Mr. Battis makes rapid and complete changes, even to the shoes and boots. He gives the entire entertainment, and makes all the changes without leaving the platform. While making the changes he discourses on the next character, giving a brief outline of the story from which the character is taken and explaining the object Dickens had in view when he wrote it. Be it known Dickens did not write a story merely for the sake of the story—he had a reform in mind, and his writings did a world of good. Mr. Battis keeps all this in mind when presenting the characters, and portrays them, not as you or I might fancy them, but as nearly as Dickens saw them as it is possible to do.

The entertainment contains plenty of humor, a little pathos and some strong dramatic climaxes. For each character Mr. Battis has arranged a sort of composite scene—a weaving together of various words and sentences belonging to that particular characterization—making every sketch complete in itself. There slips into one's mind a knowledge of the great author's work without one's knowing it. That's the truest kind of lyceum entertainment.

Dr. Sadler's Health Lectures.

Another writer says of the Saddlers, whom La Grande people know so well: The doctor's life work in study and experience has been the preparation of his lectures. While the doctor is known from ocean to ocean because of his health lectures, nevertheless, he delights in giving his illustrated lectures on the slums, for the purpose of creating sentiment and sympathy in behalf of the submerged tenth.

Both the doctor and his wife have been interested in the dwellers of the slums since their student days. Many of the doctor's beneficiaries can be found today in the counting room, in prominent business establishments and some have even attained eminence in his own profession.

The doctor's slum lectures are in every sense refined. Scenes of poverty and squalor are presented without the odor of vice and crime. The majority of the views shown by the doctor in his slum lectures were taken by his own hand or by his wife and co-laborer, during their dozen years of work in the slums.

Dr. Sadler is a regular practicing physician. In no sense, a fadist or extremist. He aims to teach the people plain facts and simple truth and trusts their common sense to make their own rules of living. The doctor is utterly opposed both to the fadist who will try to tell everyone else how to live, and to the hygienic nihilist, who teaches the people to eat anything and everything and to do about as they please in all matters of health.

The doctor is a recognized medical teacher in Chicago, and holds membership in the leading American medical and scientific associations, as well as in numerous international medical bodies.

The doctor's health lectures are certainly unique. They are positively unlike anything heretofore offered. The doctor talks straight from the shoulder and straight to the common people. Even the school children enjoy his lectures, for they are entirely free from all medical terms and scientific technicalities.

The doctor chooses to speak from the chautauqua platform, because he believes it is his duty to spend a part of his time and energy in teaching the well man to keep well. He regards it a mistake for his profession to spend all of their time on the sick people, and this is why both he and his wife leave their practice for a few weeks each year and address themselves to the task of teaching well-nigh a quarter of a million of people the gospel of health and the secrets of happiness.

Notice to La Grande Subscribers.

La Grande, Ore., June 29, 1911.—On the evening of July first we will close up our telephone office in the Masonic building and service to all the subscribers will be rendered from our office in the Foley building.

A copy of our new directory, for the combined systems, will be mailed you on that date, and we believe the same will be as complete and as nearly perfect as any directory ever published. It will be a directory for our entire system, containing approximately 2,400 names with the rules, toll rates, etc.

As before stated, through the medium of this paper, a slight adjustment of rates for the La Grande exchange will be made, as heretofore several different rates had been charged for the same class of service. The number of stations connected to the La Grande exchange will be approximately 1,200 which makes it the largest exchange in Eastern Oregon.

Commencing July first the following rates will be in effect:

- 4 party residence ... $1.50 per month
- 2 party residence ... 2.00 per month
- 1 party residence ... 2.50 per month
- 1 party business ... 4.00 per month
- 2 party business ... 3.00 per month

The rate for desk telephones, extension telephones, and extension bells remain the same as before. Above rates are effective within the city limits and a mileage rate will be charged to suburban subscribers, the same as heretofore.

A table showing the long distance rates will be found in the directory opposite the La Grande exchange. In most cases a considerable reduction has been made under those formerly charged by the Pacific company.

A majority of the resident subscribers will not be affected by the change in rate as the above rates have been in effect for all new contracts for the past two years.
