The Isthmian THEATRE

THE COOLEST HOUSE IN LA GRANDE.

"The Fiddle's Requiem" . . . Kalem
A very sentimental story of an old musician. A masterpiece of stagecraft holding the audience silent until it stops.

"The Trapper's daughter" . . . Vitagraph
This is one big picture of the hazardous life and condition of the way of north of Alaska. Full daring and adventure.

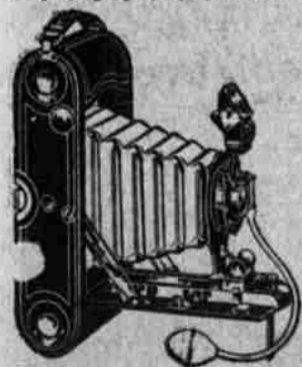

"Billy in Trouble" . . . Pathe
A roaring comedy. Billy loves two girls, marries one and trouble over the other one causes his wife to choke him to death. (maybe). Oh, it's a good one.

Illustrated Song—"We're Almost Home." This is a beautiful song and will appear to everybody. Sung by Miss Garrick.

Musical Director . . . Mr. King

The Sage of Medical Springs.

(Written and recited at Cove, Oregon, by M. L. Carter, on Cherry day. The aborigine, employed those hot springs in the hills in lieu of patent medicines to cure them of their ills. Then came along a white man, who surveyed the valley's loam. Pronounced that mountain beauty ideal for a home; His neighbors then were mostly red. He always used them white. To make it plain, in other words, He always "done 'em right."

In later years this pioneer Put up a large hotel Still people sought the hot spring cure

In hopes of getting well; From money puffed aristocrats To folks without a dime Afflicted people gathered in From every land and clime; No difference what their color was The landlord used them white, Exemplified the Golden Rule, And always "done 'em right."

When all his earthly joys are past: The bitterness and strife That comes to man while wrestling with

The problems of this life; When experts figure o'er his books And balance sheets again To see how in the years agone He used his fellowmen, Then plainly you can read upon The shaft of marble white That marks his final resting place The verdict—"Dunham Wright."
