OYSTER COSTLY IN RUSSIA

GENERAL BELIEF IN MOSCOW IS NATIVE OYSTERS TASTE BADLY

"Brackish and Unpalatable" Description Given—Cost Is High.

Washington, Aug. 16.—That oysters may be eaten in any month of the year in which the letter r appears is a rule unknown in Russia for there the taste for Blue Points and Lynn Haven Bays remains uncultivated and even oysters, grown in the Black sea and described as "brackish in taste and in general unpalatable", are all but unknown. Oyster houses are almost unknown and even in Moscow, with its population of a million and a half people, there are not more than a half a dozen places where oysters may be purchased, according to consular reports.

The Black Sea oyster, which is not bigger than the end of one's thumb, sells in Moscow at 5 cents apiece in the markets, while in the restaurants a single stew costs $1.50. American oysters are all but unobtainable, connoisseurs that sell from seven to ten cents in this country, bringing more than 50 cents in Moscow.

When the wealthy Russian orders oysters he is served Ostend oysters which cost 12½ cents to 20 cents each. Americans find it impossible to obtain freshly imported American oysters at any price.

ROUGH DRY

For several years we have refused to do rough dry washing. Owing to the small amount offered we have been unable to do the same at a profit. From the large number of inquiries recently received we believe we can open this department of our laundry at a saving to our patrons and a profit to ourselves. We shall give it a trial and if successful will continue the department permanently.

Phone for a price list and our driver will call.

Everything will be done at a piece price only.
