

STONER YOUNG BUT IS CLEVER

IS YOUNGEST SOPRANO SINGER IN LIGHT OPERA.

Is a Philadelphia Girl and Has Won Favours.

Jessie Stoner, the prima donna of William P. Cullen's musical company presenting "The Golden Girl," is one of the youngest soprano singers in light opera. She is a Philadelphia girl and is the daughter of Matilda Stoner, a well known dramatic actress of a few years ago. Miss Stoner is a musician of many attainments for aside from being a soprano of reputation, she is an accomplished violinist, a pianist of ability and possesses an insight into the technique of music of the highest order that has attracted attention throughout both this country and Europe.

This is what is said of "The Golden Girl" at The Dalles:

GRACE SECRETS ARE EXPLAINED

MISS TOWLER TELLS OF HER SECRET GRACES.

Leading Woman in "The White Sister" Talks Entertainingly.

Always:
Rest the entire weight on one foot, to avoid a military pose.

Turn the head slightly to arch the throat.

Turn the body away a little from the person to whom you are talking.

Curve the arm slightly and let the wrist continue the general curving line of the arm.

Never:
Draw the chin in but thrust it forward and slightly upward.

Make the arm straight. Such a line is positively ugly.

Make a gesture higher than the shoulder unless pointing directly upward.

Cramp the foot in a tight shoe or use the heel except as a sort of balance.

"All women are graceful—if they will permit themselves to be natural. Women's disposition to ape the ways of man destroys her natural grace, that's all."

This is Miss Towler's preface to a little talk on beauty of carriage and manner. Miss Towler is the star of member to rest all the weight of the body on one foot, relaxing the other side of the body so that it falls into a series of flowing curves from ear to heel. The woman who divides her weight evenly and stands squarely on both feet looks military and masculine.

"Tight shoes destroy all possibility of grace.

"Unless standing still the heel should be used very little. In walking, the ball of the foot comes into play. To run or dance one quite naturally uses the extreme ball of the foot; almost the toes alone.

"A woman should avoid the straight line, particularly of the arm, which is positively ugly. The arm should curve a little and the hand should never be thrown back at an angle with the wrist, but rather continue the general line of the arm.

"One should never make a gesture higher than the shoulder unless occasion requires pointing directly upward. Even up the stage the effectiveness of such gestures may be questioned.

"Two of the most beautiful lines you have center in the throat—the line from the ear to the shoulder tip, and the line from the ear to the little hollow at the base of the throat in front.

"Never draw in the chin, but rather thrust it forward and slightly upward making a beautiful line in profile.

"Turn the head slightly to arch the throat. In speaking with someone, it is infinitely more graceful if the body is turned a trifle away and the head inclined back toward the shoulder and the person addressed? There is more of coquetry, more of the woman in this pose than in directly facing a companion.
