POET SINGS OF GRANGES

M. L. C. COMPOSES A POETICAL DEscription.

Cove Grange's Hold Interesting Session—Program Given.

(Grange Meeting Chronicled in Blank Verse by M. L. C.)

In the far blue hills of Oregon, the earliest rays of morning sun gilds old Mt. Fannie's peaks of snow, then passes to the vale below where at her foot serene and still, lies Cove, supreinely beautiful. Down in the Warm Spring neighborhood, where all the citizens are good and always at the grange are found, when'er a meeting day comes 'round, last Saturday they had a feed—an open meeting? Yes, indeed! Where all the neighboring farmers went and filled up to their heart's content until the night shades gathered 'round and started grangers homeward bound. The program—well, it was immense. True music, mirth and common sense. First thing was "music by the band," which brought the millers to the stand; next Henry Chambers had the floor, he occupied an hour or more, intently skirmlish-ing the range, a'telling all about the grange. Then "declamation;" Nellie Smith and Gladys Jasper pleased us with a recitation called "Be True," just what we all were sure to go. Next was a song by Mrs. Gray, then Walter Daron had his say, relating tales with seemingly joy, of "when his papa was a boy," it sometimes proves a serious game, reporting every person's name and telling all the things they do—the boys, the girls and old folks, too. So I will skip the greater part and give the finish and the start. I'll have to tell you, I suppose, about the "Romance of the Rose," a dialogue by just two "gals," who had in former years been pals. They met by accident, and then talked old time friendships o'er again; the joys and sorrows each had seen, the years that intervened between. Miss Conley was in love with Jing-ling Johnson and the very thing that worried her; they were estranged—their future prospects all were changed—not caused by either one's intent but the result of accident. Miss Miller caught the handsome Jing and thought that he was just the thing that she had been a'looking for these half a dozen years or more. That evening so the story goes, Miss Miller was to wear a rose upon her breast if she would give her in affirmative to the proposal of said beau. Chrysanthemums betokened no. Devoid of feathers or of fuss Miss Miller proved magnanimous, though hesitatingly she goes, she leaves the friend to wear the rose. That was the final of the play and of our open-meeting day.

♦ MAX DILL EFFUSES MIRTH. ♦

Irristible Max Dill was the whole show with "The Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer" company, at the Stewart last night when a near-capacity house laughed itself tired at the bubbling mirth effused with a pleasing German brogue. The company was outclassed, overshadowed and made mediocre beside the spontaneous stream of comedy that Mr. Dill unree'd during the progress of the evening. The stage setlings in the final act were exceptionally good. The company is industrious but lacks singing qualities yet the master impersonator was behind the lamps so frequently that any little discrepancies in that respect were forgotten. It was a good night's entertainment.
