ANNA DAY, ACTRESS OF MUCH RENOWN, IN THE CITY TODAY

The announcement is made that Miss Anna Day, the sterling American actress, and her supporting cast of 20 players, will visit this city for an engagement of one night at the Steward theatre in that fine old drama, "When Knighthood Was in Flower". When Knighthood was in flower, the play was dramatized some seasons ago by Paul Kester, the well known American playwright, from Charles Major's romance of chivalry, and was the vehicle whereby Miss Julia Marlowe has achieved one of her greatest stage triumphs. This season William K. Sparks secured the original Marlowe scenery, costumes and properties, and it is said that the play this season is being given the most elaborate stage set les she has been seen before, whether her charming personality had made for her many warm and true friends among the theatre goers. This is Miss Day's third season in the character of Mary Tudor, having been one year under the management of Ernest Shipman and the previous season with F. L. Percy. This season Miss Day comes under the personal direction of William K. Sparks, whose contract with Miss Day is for five years, and during that time she is to be supplied with two new plays.

Miss Day has, by hard work, self-sacrifice and real ability, climbed the ladder. Her growth professionally has been steady but sure. This season in "When Knighthood Was in Flower" she will be seen at her zenith.
