A QUALITY SHOW. "SHERWOOD SAYS SO." THAT'S ENOUGH.

"Italian Blood" Biograph
One naturally thinks of jealousy and strife herewith connected. An Irish husband and an Italian wife are capable of anything in that line.

"The Forester's Plea" Essay
This is a western story that you have to see and you will arrive at your own conclusions from the peculiar outcome of the acts.

"Who Owns the Baby?" Lubin
A baby is found in the theatre after the performance. The result is many funny situations. Everything ends happily. Miss Garrick and Mr. Ferris will sing: "O, Promise Me."

The Fellis house in South La Grande caught fire last evening but did not burn. It was unoccupied but quick work of the local fire department in that part of the city saved the structure. A call was sent in for all firemen, however, and it was with considerable difficulty that some of them reached the objective point. This is another illustration of the benefits a fire auto would bring to La Grande.

A conference of progressive republicans of Alabama is to meet in Birmingham next week to organize for the furtherance of the progressive movement.

He Was Prepared.
An honest old Philadelphia Quaker was refused a vote because he could not show the necessary papers. He attempted to cast his ballot, but was turned down by an inspector.

"Why, my friend, thee knows me. Thee knows that I live in thy ward," said the Quaker.

"I know you by sight, but I must see your papers," was the reply.

"I would not tell thee a falsehood. I have the papers at home, and I will go and bring them to thee."

"Get the necessary papers and you can vote."

The old gentleman went home and got the papers and cast his ballot. The next year he again appeared at the polls and the same inspector challenged his vote.

"Surely thee would not have me go again a mile to get thee my papers?" asked the Quaker. "Thee must know that I have a vote."

"No papers, no vote, sir," answered the inspector.

"I thought thee might be so vicious," said the old man, as a smile played under his broadbrim. "and I have brought them with me this time. Thee will not have the pleasure of having me walk a mile for them. I will bring them next year, too."—Washington Star.
