Musical circles in La Grande look forward with great interest to the coming of the Le Brun Grand opera company, starring Antoinette Le Brun and a splendid company of singers. Their appearance in La Grande comes under the direction of Manager D. H. Steward of the Steward opera house, and will be early in April. The stellar prima donna and her company will present acts from "Martha" and "Il Trovatore", both well known grand operas. It will unquestionably be the finest presentation of talent of the year, if not in many years. That time, Le Brun has men in her company who are scarcely less capable than herself is evidence from the records of Arthur Dean, one of her company.

For seven years he was the leading baritone of the Royal Carl Rosa company of England. Mr. Henry Savage brought him to America from England to be leading baritone of his grand opera company. For two seasons he alternated in this company with the late Winfred Goff. He has also appeared in light opera work with the Florodora Opera company, throughout Cuba and Mexico. Mr. Deane sang in Crystal palace, London, in Sullivan's "Golden Legend." He sang the part of Tonio in "Pagliacci" before the late Queen Victoria, and was decorated with a pin bearing the initials "V. R." which stands for "Victoria Regina." in oratorio work in England, especially in "Elijah," he was often spoken of as the equal of Francoeur Davies. He sang also with the Bristol, England, Philharmonic. He appeared at Covent Garden with Melba and Caruso. He toured Australia with Madame Amy Sherwin and the celebrated Irish tenor Barton McGuckin. Charles Santly, the celebrated English baritone, was one of Mr. Deane's teachers. Santly was, for a time, the most noted of all baritones in England. He is still alive at the age of eighty-five and still sings.

Last evening Honon hall was the scene of one of the most successful dances given by the "younger set" this year. With pennant hung from every available place, Sororities and Fraternities on every hand, dignified tutors and deans and the merry faces of college lads and lasses the hall presented a scene of great gaiety.

ALL--STARS

It differ and offer a suggestion in another. Lottes of La Grande, has manifestly earned a position, it would appear to the Observer, to hold down a guard position. While he developed in basket shooting only toward the last of the season, he has claims to the close guarding man—Jordan would manifestly be the fellow to take the floor forward leaving Lottes at the basket. He has had less than a dozen baskets thrown over him the entire year.

Powell gives Lewin of Union a place and it is hard to dispute, yet Storm and are the same sort of men, both small in size and good at long range work. Strain is a hard man to beat at close work and especially in his team work is he superb, and if Strain were given the honorary position it would be because of his superior team work over Lewin. Storm is head and shoulders over all the others.

When one stops to analyze Powell's selection he can imagine the difficulty of the task. Every requisite of a basketball player, be it at center, guard or forward, has to be considered. No one man could possibly win the distinction with one particularly stellar phase of work. Competition is closer for the team than it has ever been, and the result has been good teams in five or six localities, in which clean ball and sport prevailed always. In Eastern Oregon, there has never been as many good players as this year.

In naming the All non Academic and academic team of this section of the state, it is hard to overlook Hollister at forward or Hamilton of Wallowa at center. Both are rattling men, yet Lindsey scored far more baskets than Hollister. He did not, however, do the gilded team work of the former. Had Woods devoted his entire time to the center position he unquestionably would have been the premier center of them all. He ruined his chances by shifting from forward to guard to center indiscriminately as the year progressed. Hamilton played but a few games while Bean plugged away all winter and no doubt earns his position.

Three hundred and twenty-six points were scored by the La Grande high school squad during the season. These points were won by the following players: Woods in 8½ games, 89 points; Bolton in five games, 68 points; Bohnenkamp in eight games, 78 points; Ralston in 10½ games, 18 points; Lottes in 11 games, 22 points; Kall in 3½ games, 22 points; Roberts in 6 games, points. Crawley played less than half-points. Crawley played less than half-games each time.

event, followed by speeches from the class residents. At 9 o'clock the students were given their programs which were in form of diplomas and the dancing began and continued until a late hour.
