SQUAW MAN.

The information that Geronimo, the bloodthirsty and treacherous Apache, Tabywana, head chief of the Colorado Utes, went on the warpath for ponies, scalps, Mexican women and any other loot which might fall to his war party. On the banks of Medicine Creek, Oklahoma, laden with spoil, many captives and a big band of ponies and a large herd of cattle, Tabywana crossed the trail of Geronimo's party. It was easy to tell from the moccasin tracks and the trail of the lodge poles that the party was the hereditary enemy of the Utes. Tabywana sent his captives to Southern Colorado with an escort, and the balance of the outfit trailed the "snakes." Near Henrietta the Utes met Captain Lawton and his interlopers of the Seventh cavalry. The Utes joined forces with the troops and drove the Apaches far back into the mountains of Mexico where they surrendered. Edwin Milton Royle in drawing the character of the famous Ute chief, has done so from life and the entire atmosphere in his western drama, "The Squaw Man," which Clarence Bennett and company are presenting, breathes the days of the vanishing west. "The Squaw Man" will be given at the Steward Monday, April 29.

Problems of City Rule Discussed.

Joplin, Mo., April 23.—Municipal problems of great variety were discussed here today at the annual convention of the Missouri League of Municipalities. Nearly all of the principal cities of the state were represented by their mayors or other officials. The principal speakers were Mayor Llewellyn Jones of Independence, president of the state league, and John McVicar of Des Moines, president of the National League of Municipalities.

ART EXPERTS.

The Can Judge Old Pewter and China Ware by the Feel.

A dealer in antiques was talking about art experts

"Take, for instance," he said, "an expert in old pewter. You think perhaps he distinguishes old pewter by the marks—the Tudor roses, the maker's name, and so forth. Bless your heart, those marks are continually forged. No, he distinguishes old pewter by the feel.

"It is like the china expert. He, with his eyes closed, will distinguish hard and soft paste china. It's the feel again—the fingers trained by years and years of study till each one has a brain in it.

"Oriental rug experts have a very subtle sense of rug differences. Sometimes they distinguish a rug by its smell—the smell of the wool and the dyes. This seems incredible till you think of the Harris tweed, that imported cloth that you yourself can distinguish by its smell—the smell which never leaves it, of the peat smoke of the cottage wherein it was woven on a hand loom.

"Wool sorters, a less highly paid class of experts, can take up a handful of wool and by its color tell you whether it came from Texas, from the territories, from England or from Canada. The soil, you see, gives its own color to the wool."—Exchange.

SAUERKRAUT EXPLODES.

Yes, Indeed, the Very Best Kind. When the Cabbage Ferments.

That German delicacy, sauerkraut, is made in large quantities in this country, and tons and tons of cabbages are shredded up to supply the demand. The Germans stoutly declare that all of their kraut is strictly handmade and that the imported kind is vastly superior to the American machine made article. They say that there is no way to obtain the long, slender delicate tendrils of cabbage of which the finest quality of sauerkraut should be made other than by having it sliced up with a sharp knife in the hands of a skilled workman. Nevertheless the greater part of the sauerkraut eaten over here is the product of an American labor saving method.

Sauerkraut does not look like a particularly highly volatile substance when it appears on a platter alongside of a pink pig's knuckle or as the foundation or groundwork upon which is placed the pump, brown frankfurter sausage. But it does frequently explode, sometimes with sufficient violence to wreck its container. This happens when fermentation sets in. And if a carload of sauerkraut goes on after having the wreckage in it, the roof and floor of the car are likely to be covered with the pickled cabbage inches thick. —New York Sun.

A Difficult Problem.

A countryman having been summoned to appear before the magistrates for not having a name on his cart was in due course brought before them. The magistrates asked him if he had anything to say for himself, and he replied he was very glad to meet such wise men, as he had a difficult question to ask them, which he could not solve himself. The question was this, he said:

"The wheels of the cart belong to John, the miller; the body of the cart to the vicar, and the old bones (meaning the horse) belong to me, and gentlemen, if you tell me what name I'm to put on the cart I'll have it done immediately."

The magistrates dismissed the case. —London Tatler.

He Wasn't Using It.

Shortly before Senator Money left the senate he was advised by his physician to give up smoking. The physician happened up at the capitol one morning, when he dropped into the Mississippi's committee room to say "Howdy." As he entered he observed the senator reared back in his chair with his feet on the desk and a huge cigar in his mouth.

"Here, senator," he said, "I thought I told you to quit that."

"Quit what?" asked Mr. Money in mild surprise.

"Why, quit using tobacco."

"Tobacco? Why, my dear doctor, I am not using tobacco. I am merely smoking a cigar Senator Beveridge gave me." —Washington Cor. New York World.

She Shunned the Mirror.

Lady Mary Wortley Montagu wrote from Venice at the age of sixty-eight: "It is eleven years since I have seen my figure in a glass. The last reflection I saw there was so disagreeable I resolved to spare myself such mortification for the future and shall continue this resolution to my life's end. To indulge all pleasing amusements and avoid all images that give disgust is, in my opinion, the best method to attain or confirm health."
