PEDESTRIAN ATTACKED.

John Dordan Has Experience With a Midnight Prowler on Adams Ave.

Wearing the bruises inflicted when struck by a stranger last night while returning to his home, John Dordan, manager of the Sommer hotel bar, is today wondering if he escaped a hold-up or if he was taken for someone else. At any rate he has been nursing a bruised face as a consequence of being hit by a man at 1 o'clock this morning, who first demanded "If he had any money." Dordan had reached the site of the new federal building while journeying homeward, and seeing a man farther up the street, thought it was a friend and commenced to joke with him at long range. The stranger, on drawing nearer, demanded money and Dordan invited him to come and get it, still believing he was accosted by Bert Hughes, with whom Dordan usually walks home after closing their respective bar rooms. When the two men came face to face, Dordan discovered his mistake and at the same time found a third man had made his appearance on the scene. Diagnosing the situation as a hold up, Dordan reached for a convenient brick when he was struck by one of the men who then beat a hasty retreat. It is said Dordan ran some 100, shortly afterwards. More deliberation has convinced Mr. Dordan that he was mistaken for some other man by men with grievances to settle and that the attack was cut short on the discovery of the mistake.

Miners Are at Out.

New York, May 3.—An effort to prevent a general strike of the anthracite coal fields which has become imminent as the result of their refusal to accept a compromise agreement drawn up by a subcommittee of the miners, the committee today is expected to ask the operators to modify their proposal. The request will probably be denied. The miners will then call a convention to decide whether to accept or reject the compromise as it now stands.
