Old World Armorers.

In olden times the armorer's work was not of a rough and ready description, but generally bore the signs of highly wrought workmanship. The various pieces of a suit fit into their positions to a nicety, there are no rough edges and, as a rule, very little that is merely careless decorative work. Fashion and reputation have left their hall mark on the armor of each period, and, like most other industries, it had its distinguished masters. The name of Jacob Topf is, for example, still famous in England, and such names as those of Lorenzo Colman of Augsburg, a German armorer of the sixteenth century; Lucio Pincinino, a Milanese, and the Wolfs of Landshut, a family of armorers that are supposed to have worked for Phillip II. of Spain, are celebrated in their own countries.—Argonaut.

A "Fowl" Ball.

A ball game between two semipro teams, one colored, was played on the north side and attracted a numerous following of negroes, who went a long way to root for their team. They occupied a section by themselves, says the Chicago Post.

A foul ball went in among them and did not come back, causing a red haired contender to go to that part of the stand and yell:

"Throw that ball back. What do you think it is—a chicken?"

In the Wrong Place.

The meek looking man walked up to the book counter. "I want something to keep me home at night, show me my faults, tell me how to spend my"— "Hold on, old man," said the clerk; "you're in the wrong department. Marriage bureau on the left, three aisles down."—Philadelphia Record.

Good Advice.

A Sewickley father recently gave his son some excellent advice. "Now that you are married, my son," said he, "listen to me." "What is it, dad?" "Try to be a husband, not merely an ex-bachelor."—Pittsburgh Post.

Stung.

"Yes, Waldo, appearances is deceitful! Here I follered a guy wot looked like a millionaire ten blocks to git dis cigar butt an' it ain't nuthin' but s' two-fer' after all."—New Orleans Picayune.

Sarcastic.

Cholly—D'you know, I'm sometimes inclined to think— Clara (encouragingly)—Why don't you do it, Cholly? It's not such a difficult thing if you really try.

Life is too short for stupid quarrels. —Phillip Gibbs.

It would surprise you to know of the great good that is being done by Chamberlain's Tablets. Darius Downey, of Newberg Junction, N. B., writes: "My wife has been using Chamberlain's Tablets and finds them very effectual and doing her lots of good." If you have any trouble with your stomach or bowels give them a trial. The Cloth of Billiard Tables.

In the county of Gloucestershire, England, there lives a family of weavers who for generations have manufactured a cloth known as the west of England cloth, whose fineness of texture and evenness of surface have never been equaled despite thousands of dollars used for machinery in an attempt to duplicate this product. The secret of this Gloucestershire family has been well kept, and they are the buyers of the finest grade of wool that the market is able to produce. Months of hard labor and energy is spent in the manufacture of 100 yards of the material, and compensation for its ownership is rife among the buyers, owing to the limited quantity available. All professional billiard players, both in Great Britain, where their game demands a higher degree of accuracy than that of the United States, and the American players usually carry along their own cloth, which is placed on the tables before every important game.—New York Sun.

Some Secret Burials.

Alaric, king of the Visigoths and their victorious leader, was buried about 1,500 years ago by his soldiers in the bed of the river Basento, in southern Italy. They first turned the waters into another channel and, after burying their chief and his treasures, let them flow back again. His grave was dug by prisoners, who were all afterward put to death, so that the Romans might never find his grave.

Attila, king of the Huns, was buried A. D. 453 on a wide plain in three coffins—one of gold, one of silver and the third of iron. In his case, too, all the prisoners who were compelled to dig his grave were immediately killed.

Another secret burial in later history was that of Fernando de Soto, the discoverer of the Mississippi, whose coffin was sunk at midnight in the middle of the broad stream to conceal his death from the natives, who had been told that he was an immortal child of the sun.

The Lovers' Leap.

Sappho killed herself by jumping from the Lovers' leap, a Leucadian cliff. This leap was often taken by lovesick persons, who believed that if they survived the fall they would be effectually cured of a hopeless passion. The leaps were always witnessed by crowds of spectators, and the would be suicides were in no way interfered with by the state. Boats were in attendance below to pick up the leapers if they came to the surface of the sea after the plunge. Sappho had a passion for a young man who did not return her love and leaped from the cliff in order to be cured. She perished in the fall. So also did Artemesia and many other celebrities.

Pliny tells a curious story of an old Athenian miser who was in love with his cook and, desiring a cure, went to have a look at the cliff. He peeped over, shook his head, went home and married the cook.
