Oldest Convict Seeks Release.

Hartford, Conn., June 10.—Among the half hundred petitions laid before the Connecticut board of pardons for consideration and action today was an application for the pardon of John Warren, who is serving a life sentence in the state penitentiary at Weatherfield. Warren has the unenviable distinction of being the oldest convict in the United States in point of service. He had just attained his majority when he was received at the penitentiary to begin a life sentence for the murder of his young wife. Today he is an old man of 74, with a record of 53 years spent behind prison walls. The state board of pardons is familiar with every detail of Warren's case. Seven times has the board considered a petition for the old man's release and seven times has the petition been turned down. Whether the eighth petition will meet with a similar fate will soon be known. Warren has been a model convict and it is safe to say that there is not an official or inmate of the state prison who would not be glad to learn that the old man would be released to spend his last years in freedom.
