WHEN PHYLLIS DRIVES.

When Phyllis drives her motorcar And down the street we set the pace There's not a monarch, earl or king With whom I would exchange my place I long to take her hand in mine And tell her of the love I feel. But oh, her thoughts are far from me, And both her hands are on the wheel. Her talk is all of chain and gears, Of sprockets, rims and springs, Of nonskid tires and inner tubes, Of carburetors and such things, And when I'd take her hand in mine And tell her of the love I feel She says, "You really must look out And keep your hands, please, off the wheel."

It surely is a cruel fate To love a girl who knows so much, Who holds the wheel, likewise your heart, Beneath her lightest finger touch, For when you'd take her hand in yours And tell her of the love you feel She says, "You really must take care And keep your hands, please, off the wheel." Some day I hope a tire will burst, Blow out or come right off the car, And that beside the road we'll stop Out in the country, inner tubes, And then I'll take her hand in mine And tell her of the love I feel When we are sitting there quite still And both her hands are off the wheel. —Harper's Magazine

Luckily I brought this mirror with me.—Pete Mele.

The Tie That Bound.
Archaeologists have discovered the palace of Jezebel, who, it will be remembered, was an ancient dame of uncertain temper, mostly bad. In the palace the grubbers found more than 5,000 cooking utensils, which might go to show that despite her violent outbreaks the ancient dame was a good cook and a provident housekeeper. And this suggests a Lincoln story. When the great emancipator was practicing law in Indianapolis a client came to him and wanted to know if something couldn't be done to protect him from his wife. He said she locked him out nights, threw dishes at him and battered him up with a club. She scolded him day and night and consistently and continuously made life miserable for him. "Have you thought of getting a divorce?" inquired Lincoln. "No, no, I don't want a divorce. Why, I wouldn't leave th' old woman for anything." "You wouldn't? After all that abuse? And why not?" "Because, squire, that old woman of mine can make the best flapjacks in Sangamon county!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Strides of Science.
There was a thin and nervous woman who could not sleep. She visited her physician, and he said: "Did you eat anything just before going to bed?" "Oh, no, doctor," the patient replied. "Well," said the physician, "just keep a glass of milk and some biscuit beside you, and every night the last thing you do make a light meal." "But, doctor," cried the lady, "you told me on no account to eat anything before retiring." "Pooh, pooh," said the doctor. "That was three months ago. Science has made enormous strides since then."—Philadelphia Record.

Usual Reasons.
"Officer, I want you to arrest the man in that house," said the excited young man to the policeman. "What for?" asked the guardian of the peace. "He kicked me out of his house." "Did he?" "Yes, he did." "And did you want to marry his daughter or sell him some poetry?"—Yonkers Statesman.

Odious Comparison.
"You have the greatest collection of animals since the one Noah put on the ark," said the admiring friend. "Noah," repeated the circus magnate scornfully. "Why he traveled by boat and had only two elephants."—Washington Star.

Addressing the Conscientious.
"What are you carrying, old chap?" "An arm and a leg," said the old man to the Grand inquest.
"The arm is all right," said the Grand inquest. "What of the leg?" "The leg is all right," said the old man. "The arm is all right," said the Grand inquest.

Paper Towels and Soap Books.
A chemical friend of the Scientific American suggests that a campaign be started against the common cake of soap. About fifty years ago there was sold a form of soap for travelers consisting of a booklet about two inches by four inches, in which small leaves of soft paper saturated with soap were found. Each leaf contained enough soap for one washing of the hands. It is suggested that one might profitably dispense through a penny-in-the-slot machine a paper towel in which is folded a sheet of soap paper for convenient use in public lavatories.

Father Was Neglected.
At first David did not like to have his teeth brushed. His father said to him one evening when the three-year-old struggled more than usual against the sanitary performance of his mother: "David, I wish my mamma had brushed my teeth when I was a little boy. I would not have lost any then." "Don't you wish your mamma had brushed your hair?" was David's revengeful reply, with a look toward papa's bald head.—Exchange.

A Delicate Compliment.
"My new gown received a very sincere compliment the other day." "How was that?" "The proprietor of a restaurant I went into asked me to sit near the window; said it would tend to his place."—Louisville Courier Journal.
