ter.

A MIGHTY WARRIOR

General Dumas Was a Colossus
In Size and In Heroism.

HIS AMAZING FEATS OF ARMS.

The Herculean Father of the Famous Novelist Had the Strength of Samson and the Valor of Horatius—His Son Was a Chip of the Old Block.

General Alexandre Dumas, the father of the celebrated French novelist, was a quintessence of herculean build, who was renowned as a tremendous fighter and as a man of marvelous bodily strength.

It is generally believed that he was the model from which his son drew the character of Porthos in the "Three Musketeers"—the sometimes valinglorious, sometimes heroic, but always ovable Porthos.

Of the recklessness and daring of general Dumas there can be no doubt, and evidently fear to him was an absolutely unknown quantity. "I had long thought the feats of arms ascribed to him in La Vendee, Italy, and Egypt rather apocryphal, too good to be true," writes M. Jules Claretie in a French paper. "They seemed to combine in one the tours de force of Porthos and the escapades of Chicot. But one day when I had promised to write a short life of the man his grandson put into my hands all the papers relating to the soldier's career, and I then saw that I had before me a real epic, describing a sequence of glorious actions of undoubted authenticity.

"It was, for example, established by official documents that general Dumas, standing a solitary colossus, at the end of the bridge of Bixen, in the Tyrn, did like Horatius of old, dispute the passage with a small band of troops when he entered the city of after the other until he had broken his sword and used his last cartridge, and that he then did convert the body of an enemy into a battering ram.

"Again, at the theater one day he was in a box with a lady who had won his affections when a gentleman of the court, pointing at him, remarked to the lady, 'So, marchioness, you have got your negro here.' At which the melancholic, without a word, seized the man by his collar, lifted him from his seat and threw him across the footlights on to the stage.

"His son inherited the father's massive physique. Traveling one year in the south of France for the sake of collecting some amusing impressions, he came to Avignon by diligence with the intention of enjoying the well known view of the silhouette of the papal palace.
The diligence, on stopping, was surrounded by porters, who tried to elude the traveler's luggage. Dumas insisted on carrying his own valise, and this provoked some insolent remarks from the porters.

"Look, said one, at the big lout who won't let a poor fellow earn a living!"

"What's so astonishing in that?" replied another. "He's a nigger. Nature intended him for a drudge."

"The son did not hesitate to imitate his father's example. He put down his valise, seized one of the porters took him by the waist, carried him to the parapet of the bridge and held him out over the river, saying:

"Give me your word that you are not the assassin of Marshal Brune!"

"Marshal Brune was assassinated at Avignon, in the white terror, 1815."

"But, monsieur—"

"Swear, I tell you, that you did not assassinate Marshal Brune or I will throw you into the Rhone!"

"The man's face became as white as a sheet, and he gasped out:

"I will swear, monsieur, by all the saints, I did not assassinate him."

"All right," said Dumas, and he threw the wretched man on to the bridge, took up his valise and went on his way, smiling, leaving the porters gasping with wonder.

"To return to the old general, he was coming back from Egypt when his ship was surrounded by some English vessels.

"Fight to the last," was the order, and when shot and shell are exhausted blow up the ship sky high.

"All very well, but he could swim and others couldn't. To equalize matters Dumas got two cannon balls, put them into his pockets and said with a laugh:

"Now I shall go all the quicker to the bottom."

"But it was not to be. He was taken prisoner and thrown into a foul dungeon at Naples, from which he only emerged with his health shattered and his magnificent strength dwindled to the vanishing point."

FLOOD STRIKES MANY STATES

SOUTHERN PORTION OF COUNTRY
SUFFERS.

Flood Hits Florida, Alabama and Other Southern Sections.

Washington, Sept. 14.—Alabama, Florida and Mobile were hit by a flood of storms, driven by a heavy gale, according to announcement posted at the weather bureau here today. At Mobile 1 1/2 inches of rain fell flooding the lower wharves. Wires are down.
Reports from Pensacola, Florida, say the river steamer National, was buffeted by a 76 mile gale.

JOHNSON'S WIFE BURIED.

Ostracized in Life, She Meets Same Treatment From Whites in Death.

Chicago, Sept. 14.—Funeral services for Mrs. Etta Duryea Johnson, wife of Jack Johnson, the negro heavyweight champion of the world—who committed suicide, was held in St.
Marks' Methodist church here today.
Rev. J. Robinson officiating. The body was interred at the Greeland cemetery.

Mrs. Etta Duryea Johnson was ostracized in death as she had been in life.
Of all her friends and relatives who honored her as the wife of Clarence Duryea, the millionaire New York turkman, only two selected. Her mother, Mrs. David Terry and Allene Terry, her sister, were the only white-persons attending the funeral. It is estimated that 7,000 negroes attended the funeral.

Lunatic Threatens Colonel.

Sacramento, Sept. 14.—Carl Ohlson of Berkeley told the police here today that he was going to keep Roosevelt from entering California. He is a harmless lunatic and was locked up.

Haywood Will Direct Strike.

Boston, Sept. 14.—Despite the indictments standing against him William D. Haywood who directed the textile strike at Lawrence, Mass., said today he would lead the Ettor-Giovannitti demonstration planned for Boston tomorrow. Bail has been arranged for in the event that Haywood is arrested. Eight thousand textile workers are expected to march.
