David Garrick's Ways.

David Garrick was a Celt and Anglo-Saxon combined, and that is why he was so successful an actor manager. That also explains why he was careful, even parsimonious at times, in small matters, but ever ready to give freely. "He had," says his latest biographer, "an almost regretful tone, a beautiful habit of sending back 1. O. P. U.'s with such words as 'I beg you will light a bonfire with the inclosed'—beautiful indeed, and very rare. Johnson declared that whenever he drew Garrick's attention to some case of distress he always received from him more than from any other person and always more than he expected. "Sir, he was a liberal man. He has given away more money than any man in England. There may have been a little vanity mixed, but he has shown that money is not his first object."—"David Garrick and His French Friends."

The Holiday Headache.

The severe headache which often follows a long railway journey or a protracted tour of a museum or a picture gallery is usually wrongfully attributed to bad air. As a matter of fact, says Dr. Sidney Stephenson, such headaches are more often than not due to the fact that the eyes have been overworked. The cure is not a cup of tea nor a bottle of smelling salts; it lies in a pair of spectacles. From exactly the same type of headache clerks, typists, dressmakers and students are great sufferers. In the great majority of these cases, says Dr. Stephenson, examination has shown that weak and overworked eyes were the cause of the trouble, which has disappeared with the use of a pair of good spectacles—Pearson's Weekly.

The Magic of September.

September seems to me to be the fairy among the months of the year. She is so crowned with gold, so full of play and magic spells, she has no work to do, and it is she who transforms the green woods and gray marshes to wonderlands of fairy fire and brings the great pale moon back round and full night after night into the skies. Yes, September has a magic!—Hildegard Hawthorne in St. Nicholas.

When the state food inspector was in La Grande he declared the Blue Mountain Creamery ice cream was the finest he had sampled and pronounced the standard above the requirements by far.

Everlasting Yeast.

A yeast that is always ready, in hot weather or cold, in town or on the farm, may be had if at each baking is saved a small quantity of the bread sponge before any salt has been used. To this must be added about one-half the same amount of sugar for a preservative. I have used the same yeast in this way for two and one-half years now, and it is as good as ever. Freezing does it no harm. No salt should be used. If in warm weather it seems to be without life, try it with a little flour and water, and it will be all right. This makes the finest possible bread.—National Magazine.
