ARABIAN JUSTICE.

Convicting a Thief by the Ordeal of the Redhot Knife.

The ordeal of the redhot knife is thus described by Abdullah Mansur (G. Wyman Bury) as he saw it in "The Land of Uz." The case was one of theft from a caravan. Two young men were implicated, one a palace slave, the other a young Arab, a native of the oasis. Each accused the other, with many oaths and much mutual vilification. Finally both invoked the ordeal of the knife.

In due course a venerable Arab appeared, bringing the instrument with him. His family for generations had possessed the hereditary right to administer the ordeal. The knife seemed a very ordinary piece of hoop iron, shaped roughly into a sort of blade about eighteen inches long. The name and attributes of Allah were engraved upon it, and it was fitted with a plain wooden haft.

An attendant brought a bowl of water and a brazier of live charcoal, in which the knife was inserted. The Arab youth received the ordeal first. He repeated his assertions of innocence and, rinsing out his mouth with water, put out his tongue, which was seized at the tip by the owner of the knife. The instrument, glowing dull red, was drawn from the brazier, and with it three light blows were struck upon the victim's tongue, which was then inspected. It merely showed slight white marks where the hot iron had fallen.

The slave's turn then came, and whether he flinched at the contact of the hot iron or had failed to keep his tongue sufficiently moist I cannot say, but the heat of the blade picked off a small patch of skin and showed a bleeding surface. According to the rules of the ordeal, that proved his guilt, and he was led away to durance vile.

The Resemblance.
"Don't you think my husband looks like Napoleon?" asked the bride.
"Well, yes, a little," her former chum replied. "He's short and stout."—Chicago Record Herald.

CELERY PROVES REMUNERATIVE

AN INDUSTRY NOT SUFFICIENTLY FOLLOWED.

Local Conditions Most Favorable as Shown by Offerings on Markets.

The success with which gardens in Grande Ronde valley can be made to produce celery is attested by the crisp snowy white specimens offered local buyers by home growers. True, Chinamen have taken the lead in the production of celery but there are many white people who are rapidly becoming conversant in the best methods of growing celery. George Shelton last year and the year before grew some beautiful specimen on the McAllister ranch near the city limits $908. . . . ranch near the city and many others are equally as proficient. That it is an industry which should be followed with more attention than it is by all truck gardeners, is certain for the quality this year especially, is very good and prices make it a remunerative proposition for the growers.

While the tomato season is almost over, a few Eagle valleys along with some peaches from the same district, arrived here yesterday.
