Wife of Form'r La Grande Contractor
Finds When Verdict Is Brought In

(Portland Telegram.)

When a verdict was returned by a jury in Judge McGinn's court today finding Chester H. Braughn of La Grande not guilty of the larceny of $13,000 in promissory notes from Newton C. Gauntt, Mrs. Gauntt, wife of the complaining witness, arose from her seat, staggered blindly from the courtroom and fainted in the corridor. She was cared for by Bailiff Noonan, who carried her into Judge McGinn's chambers, where she soon revived.

Mrs. Gauntt has been taking a very active part in the prosecution, consulting with Deputy District Attorney Dennison during every recess of the court and sitting at his elbow during the proceedings. The case of the state was so weak that it was submitted to the jury without argument on the part of the state's attorney and the verdict was returned in a few moments. The notes in question were made out by Gauntt to Braughn in payment for a block of building and loan stock of a land promotion company in Washington. Gauntt declared that the notes were never surrendered to Braughn, but were placed in his hands only temporarily for exhibition to the members of the land company. Braughn proceeded to hypothecate them. Another complaint made by Gauntt was that the stock which he purchased was highly and artistically watered.

After caring for his wife, Gauntt met Braughn in the corridor of the courthouse and attempted to strike him. The men were separated by Attorney Snedecor, but Gauntt warned the defendant that he would "fill him full of cold lead" the next time they met.

Mrs. Braughn, mother of the defendant, was in attendance at the trial.
