Preventable Disease.

Old Colonel Pestilence continues to be one of the most stubborn foes that armies have to encounter. Chicago Record-Herald.

Typhoid fever, it is estimated, costs Americans about $100,000,000 a year, and no person who has had the disease will ever say it is worth the money. Philadelphia Ledger.

Cholera killing 10,000 out of 21,000 cases reported in one province of India in a month is described as not being as severe as usual. What would they call severe anyway?—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Household Hints.

Basting threads, when saved should be wound on a spool; otherwise they get hopelessly tangled and cannot be used again.

A fern ball hung in a window will often break an awkward space. It is decorative, too, and will add a touch of living green to a room that will be agreeable.

To clean an enameled bathtub, wipe it dry and then rub it with a cloth dipped in turpentine and salt. Afterward wash it with clean warm water, and it will look like a new tub.

Political Quips.

Uneasy lies the head that runs a post office.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

Get mentioned for a cabinet place. This is the right time, and it costs nothing.—Philadelphia Press.

The United States is the only country in which a legislative body continues to do business after a new one has been chosen.—Buffalo News.

When a man says he has no political ambitions it generally means that he doesn't think he has any prospects worth considering.—Washington Star.

"Seen who, you say, Mr. Fabens?" "Oh, the boy's ghost," the boy's ghost? Old Tom was nearly frightened out of his wits.

"Mr. Fabens," said the captain, "let a lantern take that fellow below and see what scared him."

"So Mr. Fabens descended the ladder with half the crew at his back, and old Tom bringing up the rear. As they came forward the mate called out, 'Where's your ghost? I don't see any ghost!'"

"Until now I had lain quiet, but feeling that I was discovered I rose up to step out of the coil. Tom gave another yell and broke for the hatch ladder, followed by half the men."

"Mr. Fabens came up, reached over, lifted me out by the collar and marched me on deck, where I was at once surrounded by officers and crew."

"Captain King stepped forward and said, 'Well, boy, where have you been for the last forty-eight hours?'"

"Between decks, sir," I sheepishly answered.

"What have you been doing between decks?"

"Sleeping, sir," I replied.

"What sleeping two days and nights?"

"Not all the time, sir," I replied. "Had anything to eat?"

"Apples," I ventured.

"Where did you get the apples?"

"Out of the hold, sir. I got the head out of a barrel."

"Oh, you did? Do you know you've been bringing cargo?"

"Thinking the force had gone down enough, for all hands were on the broad iron deck, sternly..."

"Now go forward, boy, and if you eat any more snips like that, you'll get a rope's ending, you'll remember all your lives, then to Mr. Fabens, he added, 'Keep him up in his days, watch below for a week and give him plenty of work...'"

"That ended his lecture, and I was glad it was over and that I had escaped so easily. Going forward with the men, I was pleased to see they were all smiling, not even Tom, although he might have been examined if he had done so..."

John Bright's voice was unequivocally for peace! Says the London Nation: He was walking one past the Crimean monument in London with one of his sons, then... Every one knows that the word "Crimea" is engraved on the monument and to the word upon it and asked:

"Father, what is that?"

"That," said John Bright, pointing also to the word, "is a crime."
