"Skepticism" summarizes the keynote of thought in Dr. E. B. Fyke's interpretation of Edgar Allan Poe's "The Raven," in his lecture last evening. In an eloquent style he took his audience through the conditions leading up to the night when "The raven was knocking, knocking at my chamber door," and pictured vividly the struggle with skeptical ideas represented by the Raven, that Poe fought.

Sacrifice!

There was only one piece of pudding for dinner, and Mrs. Jones divided it between her children, Ned and Grace. Ned looked first at his plate and then at his mother's empty plate. "Mother," he said, "I don't think I can eat my pudding while you haven't any." "Why, Ned," said the mother, much pleased, "how unselfish you are dear! But you see, my boy, there is no more pudding." "I know that, mother. You take Grace's!"—London Mail.

"Not always."
"Well, name an instance to the contrary."
"When you're playing cards with your girl for kisses."

MOCK WINDOWS.

They Were Common in England When Real Ones Were Taxed.

The window tax in England, a very old tax commencing in the reign of William III., was not discontinued until Lord Halifax changed it to the house duty in 1851.

It must have caused a great amount of consumption, sunburns and other foul air maladies, for in 1850 there were only an average of six windows in English houses. Indeed, the British architects are not yet free from the bad influence of this tax.

In very many old houses in England today there may be seen mock windows painted on the walls for symmetry—hideous things. Not only were glazed windows taxed, but any hole in the wall was included. Indeed, in the early days only very rich people in England had glass windows, and so precious were these that they were carried from one house to another when people moved their quarters.

Curious dodges were practiced to escape the tax, such as extending one window across two houses or making a very wide division between two panes of glass. The loss to the nation must have been a hundredfold the revenues collected from this bad tax.—Boston Herald.

The Word "Set."

What is the favorite word of the English language? The Germans have their "schlag" and "zug" which cover many meanings. But we best them in the one word—not "post"—which you might suspect of the supremacy of ambiguity—but "set." One always thought that "post" was the word that meant all things and nothing. The punster should watch the word "set," which has achieved nearly seventy columns in the new English dictionary. It is a small word, but its meanings are almost unlimited. You should set to work on the word, which you use every day in a hundred senses. And it would be a pleasant, popular game to set down the number of ways in which you have used that word during the day. "Set to partners" you might call it.—London Chronicle.

Hard Questions.

Oh, tell me, does the setting sun e'er feel a sinking pain? Why is (inform a "Puzzled One") a weathercock so vain? Do stars require a gun to shoot? What makes a bucket pall? What tailor makes the chimney's soot? Who writes the comet's tail?

And why are dogs so lovable, how ever much they whine? Pray tell me Mr. Editor, what makes the fir tree plie?

Why is a vessel's hind part stern? Who sings an old hen's lay? Please tell me, for I'd like to know, who wears the close of day?—London Answers.

The Greek Figure.

Greek figures of men appear taller and more graceful than those of moderns. Modern artists make the upright figure seven and one-half times the length of the head. The Greeks made it eight times, lengthening the shin, and the longer sweep from knee to heel gave the figure increased grace and dignity. The same plan was frequently adopted by Lord Leighton, in whose paintings the same effect is obtained.

His Method.

"I always did make a hit with the women," bragged Henry VIII. "With your wit, sire?" murmured the obsequious courtier. "No," answered the monarch, with a sly smile, "with an ax."—Baltimore American.

She Was Anticipating.

"When he proposed to her she knocked him down."
"Gracious! What did he say to that?"
"He yelled 'Hold on, hold on—We ain't married yet!'"—Houston Post.
