Sherry's

Wednesday and Thursday
"IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TOO MEND"

Charles Reade's masterpiece, one of the greatest novels ever written. Its realistic exposure of the barbaric practices in the English prisons was a great factor in bringing about prison reform. A Vitagraph Western production and a double Biograph comedy complete a splendid program for today and tomorrow.

MILLER CAREER

Miller, a frequent contributor of poetry to the paper. A brief courtship was followed by their marriage and two children were the result of that union. Their married life was not happy, however. His wife soon separated from Miller and took the youngest child, a boy, with her, and the daughter, Maud Miller, in later years well known as an actress, remained with her father.

In 1863 Miller opened a law office in Canyon City, Oregon. While living in that young and struggling town he distinguished himself by leading an expedition against the hostile Indians, who had attacked the settlement. In 1866 Miller was made county judge of Grant county, which post he occupied until 1870. His literary activity began about 1864 or 1865. He began to write poems, dealing mostly with the adventurous life of the west. He published first a collection of poems in paper covers, called "Specimens" and next a volume with the title "Joaquin et al", which contained a defense of Joaquin Murietta, the famous Spanish-American outlaw, who had been the terror of California for ten years. From this Miller took his pen-name "Joaquin", under which he published all his subsequent works.

In 1870 Miller went to London, where he published, in the following year, his "Song of the Sierras," and "Pacific Poems." During his sojourn in London Miller was taken up by society and became a much sought-after guest in drawing rooms. The romantic nimbus surrounding his personality, his eccentric way of dressing and of bearing himself interested society and he was fairly overwhelmed with invitations. His poems were read by everybody and there was no man more popular than he in London at that time. He used to entertain his hosts with accounts of his life in the wilderness, his fights with Indians and outlaws, his experiences in the gold fields and in the camps of the Indians. While some of these accounts were to some extent true, though exaggerated and supplemented with sensational details, others were purely fictitious, like his account of his experience as volunteer in Walker's Nicaragua expedition of 1855. As a matter of fact Miller never saw Walker or Nicaragua, which did not prevent him, however, from giving the most vivid descriptions of the tropical forests of Nicaragua and of the bloody battles of the expedition with the hostile Indians.

After his return from England Miller found himself a celebrity in his own country. He was well known and had no difficulty in finding papers or magazines to eager to print and liberally pay for his prose and poetry. He became a regular contributor to the daily and periodical press and in 1873 published another volume under the title "Song of the Sun Lands" and a prose volume, entitled "Life among the Modocs; Unwritten History". Since then he has published more than twenty books, poems, novels, essays and plays. Of the latter "The Danites" and "49" became quite popular. For two years he traveled in Alaska and wrote letters to newspapers about the conditions in the Yukon gold region. For a number of years he lived the life of a recluse on his farm near Oakland, California, but the last years of his life he spent on his estate "The Heights" near Diamond, California.
