Sherry's Present Musical Program

Webster and Wardes, the clever vocalists who have given such universal satisfaction during their stay here render a complete change tonight as follows:

"That's How I Need You."—Soprano solo.

"Glow Worm"—Duet.

"The Fisherman"—Duet.

Baritone Solo—Selected.

La Grande music lovers have been given a rare treat and no little surprise has been shown at their appearing in small towns. They will continue here but two more days and then go to big towns as they have signed contracts with an eastern theatrical syndicate. Both Miss Webster and Mr. Wardes are but a short time from leading roles in an eastern grand opera company.

Alaska Fraud Alleged.

Chicago, Ill., March 11.—Effort is made today to prevent the introduction of documentary proofs of false entries, filed on government lands in Alaska, in a suit against Albert C. Frost of Chicago, who, with five others, is accused of defrauding the government out of millions of land and holdings in the far north. The defense argued the evidence was inadmissible because the filings were made by individuals not intended as links in the defrauding conspiracy.

QUEER SPORT IN CHINA.

Dropping a Pheasant With a Twenty-four Pound Gun.

Foreign sportsmen in China always observe with curious interest the maneuvers of native hunters.

An English sportsman tells of an incident he witnessed at the well known Shaba, or lower barrier, of Nadoo creek, in north China. A native shooter had his ginsing with him—a most uncanny looking weapon. That there might be no question as to its length, it was placed upright alongside the Briton. It exceeded his height by two feet two inches, making the piece of ordnance over eight feet in length. Englishmen sometimes complain of the weight of their own guns—six and a half to seven and a half pounds. So it is astonishing to behold a Chinese hunter carrying a twenty-four pound gun all day long.

This particular native was accompanied by a small, odd looking animal, which the foreigner was assured was a dog. Observation of the hunter and dog at work made a deep impression upon the stranger.

A hen pheasant happened to drop into a furrowed field at feeding time. The native took her bearings, crept up as closely as he safely could, put down his gun on a bit of higher ground, and kept it trained on the bird. Meantime the dog lay down across the barrel of the gun, thus serving as a screen for his master. When the proper moment had arrived, the man fired, the bird was killed upon the ground, and the dog remained on the barrel until his master took up the gun to reload.—Youth's Companion.

When Join Rimed With Vine.

Some mispronunciations of today once enjoyed the highest standing. We must not think that Shakespeare was sinning when he rimed groin, swine. Indeed, ol, ilke long i (as in ice), survived regularly through the eighteenth century. When a countrywoman of our time watches the kettle bble or fines the church she has behind her Cowley's join, vine; Gray's shine, join; Pope's join, divine; Dryden's join, design; Addison's find, joined; Coleridge's joined, mind; Wordsworth's joined, kind, and Byron's aisles, tolls. Indeed, so late a writer as Bulwer gives us mind, enjoiued, which sounds as dialectal as Gray's toll, smile. It is no wonder that Joel Barlow, the author of our own great typographical epic, "The Columbiad," joined join and divine.—Yale Review.

Absentminded La Fontaine.

La Fontaine, whose fables are the children's earliest task, was very absentminded. He went to the court of Louis XVI, to present a copy of his fables to the king. And he forgot the book. Fortunately, the king knew La Fontaine, his fables and his foibles and gave him a thousand pistoles (about $250). Unfortunately, though, La Fontaine left the money in his hired carriage on his way back to Paris.

The Dear Friends.

"You should not talk about that girl in that fashion."

"Why not?"

"The Bible says we should love our enemies."

"She ain't no enemy; she's a friend of mine."—Houston Post.

Shakespeare on the Road.

Hamlet had just been bit by a cold storage egg, whereupon he turned gravely to his audience.

"How truly spoke the good Marcellus!" quoth he. "Something is rotten in the state of Denmark!"—Harper's Weekly.

STORIES OF SHERIDAN.

The Great Writer Had a Hard Time Dodging His Creditors.

Like many a brilliant man before and since his time, Richard Brinsley Sheridan had a habit of resting on his oars a bit too long when he thought himself tired. Then, finding himself short of money, he would borrow. This habit increased with his years, and, moreover, his efforts to discharge his obligations grew less and less. His reputation at last was such that tradesmen demanded cash on delivery.

Benjamin Robert Haydon, who was himself woefully addicted to the same bad habit, tells with evident glee two stories of his fellow sufferer.

A butcher one day brought a leg of mutton to Sheridan's house. The cook took it, put it into the kettle, and went upstairs for the money. As she stayed away some time, the man entered the kitchen, took off the cover of the kettle, fished out the joint and walked off with it.

But the laugh was not always on Sheridan. A creditor whom he had successfully avoided for some time came plump upon him as he emerged from Pall Mall. There was no possibility of dodging, but Sheridan did not lose his presence of mind.

"Oh," said he, "that's a beautiful mare you're on!"

"Dye think so?"

"Yes, indeed. How does she trot?" The creditor was pleased—even flattered. He told Sheridan he should see and immediately urged the mare to do her prettiest. But long before the animal's best pace was reached, Sheridan had turned again into Pall Mall and was lost in the crowd.—Exchange.
