COBB AFTER NEW RECORD.

Detroit, Player Wants to Set Salary Mark That Will Stand.

According to a statement made recently to an old friend by Tyrus Raymond Cobb, the Georgia Peach did not ask the Detroit club for $15,000 a year salary because he wants the money. It is stated that what Cobb really sought is the honor of having drawn more money than any ball player ever drew for his services in one year.

Cobb is a peculiar person, the story goes. He hopes to send his fame echo-ling down the halls of time as the leader in every possible line in the baseball sense. As a player he hasn't missed anything for which he started excepting the salary thing. He now draws $9,000 per year. Hans Wagner gets or has been paid in the past $10,000 per season. This Cobb's friends say, is the largest sum that any player other than a manager has received in the history of baseball. Cobb wished to beat it. The Georgian wanted to put the figure so high up that it cannot be beaten in his lifetime.

THORPE HAS AN ORIGINAL IDEA OF FUN.

Jim Thorpe, the Indian, now a member of the Giants, is a great lad, but has original and aboriginal ideas, says Expert W. A. Phelan. A correspondent who went to the Olympic games says that Thorpe once invited him out for an evening, but never got the chance again. "We were in Paris," says he, "and a lot of athletes and scribes were lolling in the hotel when Thorpe came in and asked us to go with him. Said he had found a place where we could have more fun than any other place he ever saw. So we trotted along, and Thorpe led us to a joint under the shadow of Montmartre, a regular bar cave, full of hard looking Apaches. 'Where's the fun here, Jim?' I queried. Thorpe grinned a foot wide. 'Big lots fun,' said he. 'Here last night. Had to lick seven Frenchmen. Maybe so we get fine fight to night. All we need do just go in, act noisy, have elegant fight. Come along!'"

Tomorrow will be like today. Life wastes itself while we are preparing to live. Emerson
