FLOWERS OF THE NIGHT.

They Are Usually Pure White With a Peculiar Glow.

As we all know, there are both day blooming and night blooming flowers. The former are generally decked in red, blue, yellow or purple and have hues, spots or markings on their petals which often act as guides to the nectaries which are visited by the bees and butterflies.

The night blooming flowers, on the other hand, invite the visits of moths or other night flying insects and therefore have recourse to something like the tasks of the fireflies and the glow-worms. They are usually pure white and have such a peculiar texture that they seem to glow with internal light in the dim shades of evening.

At times you might almost fancy that they were stained by nature with some forerunner of luminous paint, so clearly do they reflect every visible ray of the faint twilight. They thus succeed in catching the eyes of the moths, which, of course, are modified especially for perceiving and receiving the slight stimulus of the dusk and gloaming.

But the nocturnal flowers have no lines or spots, because these last could never be perceived in the dim gloom of the evening. They make up for it, however, by being very heavily scented. Indeed, almost all the strong white flowers, which are such favorites with florists, such as jasmine, tuberose, gardenia, stephanotis, serena and syringa, which belong to the night blooming plants, are especially adapted to attract the senses of winged nocturnal insects.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

HELP THAT HELPS.

Lincoln's Response to His Brother's Request For a Loan.

Abraham Lincoln's good sense is witnessed by almost every act of his life. His sound views on indiscriminate charity and the best means of encouraging thrift and industry are shown by the following letter to one of his brothers:

"Dear Johnson—Your request for $50 I do not think it best to comply with now. At the various times when I have helped you a little you have said to me, 'We can get along very well now,' but in a very short time I find you in the same difficulty again. Now, this can only happen by some defect in your conduct—what that defect is I think I know; you are not lazy, and still you are an idler. . . .

"You are now in need of some ready money, and what I propose is that you should go to work, tooth and nail, for somebody who will give you money for it. . . . and then to secure you a fair reward for your labor I now promise you that for every dollar you will between this and the first of next May get for your labor I will then give you one other dollar. . . . You have always been kind to me and I do not mean to be unkind to you. On the contrary, if you will follow my advice you will find it worth more than eight times $50 to you. Affectionately your brother,
"A. LINCOLN"

The Inevitable Comment.

A committee of investigating scientists approached a lady.

"Madam," said Professor Prewins, the spokesman, offering her a magnificent chrysanthemum of rare and lovely hue—"madam, permit us to present this flower to you as a token of our high regard."

She clasped the splendid blossom in her lily hand.

Breathlessly the committee awaited her response.

"How beautiful it is!" she answered.

"What an exquisite shade of purple! I should love to have a dress of that color."

Dr. Prewins nodded knowingly to the committee, as if to say, "I told you so."

The committee winked at the professor and whispered, "You win!"—Newark News.

The Pecan.

It is interesting to record that the first grafting of a pecan tree was accomplished by a negro slave, and it is doubtful whether any other member of the black race has ever performed an economic service to this country that is so signal in its importance. In 1847 Antoine, the slave gardener of Telesphore J. Boman of Louisiana, grafted sixteen trees of the variety that is now known as the Centennial. He later succeeded in grafting 110 other pecans, and these were the only grafted nut trees in America before 1865.—Archibald Rutledge in Outing.

Woes of the Jokesters.

First Humorist—No, I never read my jokes to my wife. She only laughs at them. Second Humorist—You're lucky; mine cries.—Chicago News.

Double Entendre.

"Got your teeth filled, eh? Did the dentist do a good job?"
"Well, he spared no pains."—Lippincott's.

A single day grants what a whole year denies.—Dutch Proverb.

Too inquisitive.
"Bridget, didn't I hear you quarreling with the milkman this morning?"
"Sure not! His hired girl's sick, and I was inquiring after her. But he's an impolite devil."
"How's that?"
"Says I, 'How's your milkmaid?' An' he looked mad an' says, 'That's a thrade secret!'"—Kansas City Journal.

A "Last Hope."
"What did she pay?"
"The 'Last Hope'—such an appropriate selection!"
"Why do you say so?"
"Because it matched the expression of her features when they heard her begin it."—Baltimore American.
