SPLENDORS OF SPACE.

Matchless Beauty of the Milky Way as Seen in a Telescope.

The Milky way, or galaxy, is an apparent ring extending entirely around the universe of stars visible in the largest telescope. It is composed of suns in literal millions. They are so remote that, as seen from the earth, they appear to be close to each other, while really they are separated by millions and billions of miles. To the eye the belt of soft light looks like a continuous band of cloth of pearl, but telescopes have the effect of bringing objects nearer. This separates the filmy cloud into many millions of glittering but minute points on the black background of space. At a distance forest trees seem to be close together, but as they are approached they separate and stand alone.

It is next to impossible to describe the matchless beauty of the Milky way as seen in a telescope of great power. Carpet a large room with black velvet. Hang many electric lights in the ceiling. Throw down and scatter all over the black floor a bushel of minute diamonds, rubies, pearls, sapphires, opals, amethysts and other gems. Then turn on the light.

You would have a faint imitation of the supernal glories of the galactic hosts. For the appalling depths of space look black in our great telescopes. In places these suns look by perspective as though they were arranged in piles, heaps and banks or built up into colossal windows, or twisted into spirals, or dashed into wisps and cosmic spray. In some places the concentration is so great and dense that only the most powerful telescopes on earth can magnify enough to bring out details. A few clusters exist that have not so far been resolved into these needle points. And the height of human happiness is to watch these vast congeries of distant suns in a huge telescope.—George Wharton James in National Magazine.

Two Gits.

They both had sections of the paper. "Here's a New York man gives his wife a diamond necklace," said she. "Nothing like that ever happens to me." "Well," said he, "here's a Chicago man gives his wife a black eye. Nothing like that ever happens to you, either, my dear."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Oval Moon.

According to a discovery made by Professor Castaldi of Portugal, the moon is not round, but oval. Cinematograph pictures, taken during an eclipse of the sun, show a difference of three miles between the greatest and least breadth.

Doubted Him.

She—Anyhow, you must admit he is a well bred man. Did you notice his knowledge of Aristotle? He—I did; and if you want my candid opinion, I don't believe he's ever been there.—Minneapolis Journal.

A Crazy Act.

TURNED INTO STONE.

Petrified Objects Are Common in Regions Where Limestone Prevails.

Petrified objects are found in a great many sections of the world, most of them in sections where limestone is prevalent.

Petrified wood is quite common. Bits of wood, pieces of bark and small twigs are the more common, but in some places whole logs are found, and these are so well petrified as to show the bark as perfect as when the tree was growing. Different kinds of wood petrify. It depends more on the amount of lime than on the quality of timber.

In Arizona whole trees are petrified, and, in fact, whole forests have been turned into stone, and some wonderful specimens are to be found there. The petrified trees are sometimes cut up and converted into various articles of value.

Petrified moss is found in many places. It is very beautiful. Petrified grasses, leaves of trees and petrified nuts and fruits have been discovered in some places. Petrified reptiles and small animals have also been found.

Cobs from which the grains of corn have been removed make rather curious petrifications. One of the most curious found is that of a piece of honeycomb turned into solid stone, but showing every honey cell perfectly shaped and equally distributed just as the honey bees had built it. If the comb had contained honey the water had dissolved that, for the cells were empty.

Petrified human remains are not uncommon. In some of the cemeteries in sections where limestone prevails in abundance bodies have been lifted to move them to other cemeteries, and they were found to be turned to stone.—Harper's Weekly.
